Two victims in comas as prosecutors charge man with North Side shooting

BY CWBCHICAGO

Prosecutors have filed attempted murder charges in connection with last week's double shooting in Edgewater. Tavaris Davis, 20, is facing two counts of attempted murder for allegedly firing shots into an apartment, critically injuring his ex-girlfriend and her new boyfriend.

Chicago police officers responded to calls of a person shot inside an apartment in the 5800 block of N. Kenmore around 10:50 p.m. Friday, Feb. 7, according to a CPD media statement. They found two gunshot victims at the scene, a 25-year-old man and a woman whose age has not been released. Prosecutors said Davis knows the male victim from high school.

Davis knew his ex was at the male victim's apartment last Friday, prosecutors said, and video allegedly showed Davis holding a firearm with a laser sight. He fired the weapon into the apartment, striking both victims. They remained in critical condition and in comas this week, officials said. The man has gunshot wounds throughout his body and the woman was shot in the chin. A bullet is lodged in her spine.

We reported last week that the victims were familiar with the gunman, and CTA surveillance video showed a man matching that description boarding a northbound train at Thorndale shortly after the shooting. Investigators quickly focused on Davis. Prosecutors said he "made admissions" after being arrested.

Judge Sabra Ebersole detained Davis, whose next court date is March 7.

Public meetings Feb. 25-26 to unveil designs for areas under new Red Line Tracks in Edgewater, Uptown

The Chicago Transit Authority [CTA] announced it will hold community meetings on Feb. 25 and 26 to present final development plans for the space under the new 'L' tracks between the Lawrence and Bryn Mawr stations, as part of the historic $2.1 billion Red and Purple Modernization [RPM] Phase One Project.

More than one mile of new, open space under the 'L' tracks has become available to the Edgewater and Uptown communities following the removal of the century-old embankment as part of the RPM project, which has rebuilt Red and Purple line elevated track structure and is also reconstructing the Lawrence, Argyle, Berwyn and Bryn Mawr Red Line stations. The open space is located underneath Red and Purple Line tracks between W. Lawrence and W. Ardmore avenues.

For residents in the blocks between Foster and Ardmore, the meeting will be held Tuesday, Feb. 25, 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at Saint Ita Catholic Church, 5500 N. Broadway

For residents in the blocks between Lawrence and Foster, the meeting will be held Wednesday, Feb. 26, 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at Truman College, 1145 W. Wilson Ave.

The same information and presentation for all 10 block designs will be presented at both meetings.

CTA partnered with Site Design Group, a landscape architecture, urban design and architecture firm to guide the development of a block-by-block plan for the new space under the CTA tracks.

Design plans include a pedestrian trail, dog parks, playground, fitness area, benches, and flexible-use plaza space for community events.

The CTA with Site Design held multiple public meetings in 2024 to solicit ideas from the community on the types of activation they would like to see under the elevated tracks.

At the upcoming meetings, CTA will share the new final block-by-block concepts that were inspired by the community's input and provide a timeline for the construction work.

Alderman: 'It's a done deal' City moving forward with Granville Ave. remake

BY RONALD ROENIGK

Confessions were taken last Saturday at the Trinity Church in Edgewater, but the congregation was not in a forgiving mood when they heard that the changes proposed for Granville Ave. were a done deal.

The devil was indeed in the details, and many Edgewater and Uptown residents now wonder why city officials were wasting everyone's time through a variety of public events, when there was never going to be any impact made by citizen participation in the process.

Forgiveness is only given after contrition is shown, and amends made. No contrition was ever shown, nor were any amends going to happen.

This summer the city plans to move forward with their plan to remake Granville (6200 North) hoping to push a great deal of the current commuter traffic onto other nearby residential streets, by creating one-way stretches, and exacerbating congestion and traffic backups by installing more concrete road obstacles and lane blockers.

"Why are we here?," asked local residents of Ald. Leni Manaa-Hoppenworth [48th] Feb. 15, after she told the audience at Edgewater's EPIC block club meeting that the city plans to start work this summer, and that she supported the Granville plan.

The city wants commuter traffic moved off Granville by adding bike paths to make the street more bike, scooter and pedestrian focused.

Loyola stands strong on DEI policies amid federal actions

School releases DEI guidance for businesses, organizations

BY BOB ZULEY

Loyola University's Office of Institutional Diversity, Equity and Inclusion [DEI] is continuing to operate as normal in the face of a national trend to move against the policy following an executive order from the Trump Administration targeting DEI initiatives, according to a report in the Loyola Phoenix student newspaper.

President Trump signed an executive order Jan. 21 titled, "Ending Illegal Discrimination and Restoring Merit-Based Opportunity" which ended all DEI programs in the federal government. It further required the Attorney General to seek termination of similar programs in the private sector including private universities.

Loyola's Chief Diversity Officer and Vice President of Institutional Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Dominique Jordan Turner said the university plan to maintain its DEI programs because it creates equal access to positions tied to Loyola's Jesuit values. She is the first person to occupy that position.

"Our mission calls us to do this work," Jordan Turner said. "That's one thing people need to remember about being a Jesuit Catholic institution. We have a 150-year history focused on social justice and working to support those at the margins, so DEI is not just a program that was created after the murder of George Floyd. This is very much connected with our mission. No matter who is in office, it doesn't move us away from doing our mission."

University of Illinois System President Timothy Killeen said that he has stopped using the term "DEI" because he doesn't know what it means anymore.

As part of his executive order, President Trump threatened to investigate universities with endowments greater than $1 billion that engage in DEI work. Public and private universities in Illinois receive federal funding through financial aid programs for students and through funding for research.

The Univ. of Chicago, Northwestern Univ. and the Univ. of Illinois System have endowments that qualify but the leaders of these institutions have remained silent on whether they will stand behind their DEI programming.

In related news, Illinois Attorney General Kwame Raoul released guidance to "help businesses, nonprofits, and other organizations understand the viability and importance of diversity, equity, inclusion and accessibility policies and practices in creating and maintaining legally compliant and thriving workplaces."

But the DEI guidance page is not presently posted on Raoul's official webpage.

Dominique Jordan Turner. Courtesy Loyola University Chicago

Social media commentator Lamont Pete had this to say about DEI in the news: "Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion. Sounds pretty reasonable, right? But somehow in the alternate reality of right-wing outrage, it's been rebranded as a leftist plot to replace "qualified" White workers with, I don't know, drag queens and Black Panther party members? It's absurd."

Yet America annually celebrates Martin Luther King day as a holiday, and among the many famous and memorable lines he is remembered for includes, "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character."

Bite the bullet and do your duty

By Thomas J. O'Gorman

My mother, Eileen O'Connor O'Gorman, was like a skilled physician. I never ceased to tell her so. These many decades later I realize that was largely due to her skills for diagnosis.

She could smell all the phony symptoms of fake disease. You know, spelling tests at school. Homework assignments left incomplete. Serving early morning Mass at 6:30 a.m. Or a piano lesson unpracticed for.

She knew all the tell-tale signs. She only had one treatment for such maladies: Bite the bullet and do your duty.

But when temperatures really did rise or night sweats soaked the sheets. Or when there was an aching tooth from too much candy. Or when there was trouble below decks in the tummy, she was spot on, Mayo Clinic style.

She had a full dispensary in her Eisenhower era medicine chest next to the iodine. Or on a pantry shelf next to the flour. She might frequently consult her older sister, our Aunt Mary O'Connor Curran, who with six children had three times as many children as we did. They really had it tough. She'd send her brood out however they felt. She was a skeptical physician.

Staying home from school was always a big moment. After finally waking up, you'd have the comfy chair in front of the television, and mom, all to yourself for the day. She'd place a large oak table leaf from the dining room across the arms of the chair, creating a mini-intensive care unit for recovery. It was perfect for eating a good breakfast enjoying soft boiled eggs and buttered toast, with mugs of sweet and creamy Irish tea.

Getting the tea down was the essential miracle drug that broke fevers, aches and pains, scrapes, cuts and bruises.

However if medical conditions warranted, as a last resort, a steaming John Powers Irish whiskey hot toddy with lots of honey, clove and lemon would be prescribed. It warmed the very soul and guaranteed a speedy recovery once you woke up from the sleep it would quickly induce.

My lasting catalogue of sickbed memories includes bouts of Chicken Pox, German Measles, Poison Ivy, stomach flu, winter colds, a broken wrist and stepping barefoot on a tack. Oh the wonder and mystery of my mom's clinic. All that was left was a note to a nun.

We're thinking about that now after examining the latest round of urban disease that is infecting an otherwise healthy Chicago. Symptoms would, of course, be the place to start.

Is Chicago's current malady, first of all, for real?

Sure. No fake illnesses here. No wanting to avoid something just because it's difficult or challenging. The health of the city should be responsibly attended to. No room for sleeping in. Copping out or attempting to put off what urgently must be attended to. Like paying the bills. Spending responsibly. Learning the lessons of competent governance. Maintaining healthy political awareness and having action plans.

The out-of-control financial intelligence of low grade, would-be political leaders only digs an urban pathway of crumbling destruction. Injecting missed opportunities for growth and fiscal health and downgraded bond ratings.

Shattered abilities for increasing employment and the failed expansion of urban safety to protect neighborhoods, furthering any chance for harmonious living.

You only have to have a walk around N. Michigan Ave. to see all too painfully the ghost town that has replaced a once showcase of commerce and economic success. Not one inch of the street level along the Drake Hotel has a shop that is open and functioning. There is trouble up and down Boul Mich. Both sides of the street. A tragic tale of neglect and decline.

But the nightmare of pitting the vengeful and vindictive against the best intentions of well-meaning public leadership creates a fatal diagnosis for present city government. It's the dark shade of urban decay when you pay your Assistant Press newbie $192,000 a year.

A city shattered by unstable poor leadership forces Chicago Police to be armed guards at the mayor's City Hall unreported Treasure Room. The fever and night sweats of tragic disfigurement spread when you permit the Chicago Teachers Union to set your shabby political agenda.

The death-knell of the once proud capital of the American heartland sounds when secrets, scandals and political ineptitude tries to vanquish all moral responsibilities.

The door has already slammed on Ken Griffin's Citadel Finance and United Airlines is looking at 1,000 acres outside Denver for their new headquarters.

Sick as Chicago's current leadership turns out to be, crippling us in a stomach flu of political heaving and municipal governmental nausea, there is one bright spot. The distant sign of a tell-tale healing still possible.

There's a poll showing Mayor "Teachers Pet" Johnson has an approval rating of barely 12%. Which means almost 90% of Chicago citizens are now sick of Johnson.

It's definitely time to pull the plug on Teacher's Pet. There are no signs of life.

But Chicago isn't dead yet. Time for a Powers hot toddy and a snooze. And then just a note to a nun.

Heartland Alliance implosion affecting 8,000 people, closing food pantries, health clinics

Groceryland's Lori Cannon vows to continue to "fight back"

BY BOB ZULEY

The slow-motion disintegration of Heartland Alliance continues as it was announced last week that the agency said its three food pantries will close Feb. 22 and its other remaining operations will close by April 7, Michael Brieschke, chairperson of the Heartland Alliance Union told WBEZ reporter Kaitlin Washburn.

The news affects roughly 8,000 Chicagoans who depend on the organization for food and health services. It comes less than a year after Heartland Alliance split up into four separate entities: Heartland Human Care Services, Heartland Alliance Health, Heartland Alliance International, and the National Immigrant Justice Center.

Brieschke said the union got the news Feb. 5 from Heartland Alliance Health leadership. The organization employs 113 people, 50 of whom are union members. The employees have not been told when their last day will be, Brieschke said.

"Not only are they losing their jobs, but they're also devastated for the 8,000 people who are served by Heartland Health Alliance each year. This will have a big impact on them," he said.

The health clinics at 4009 N. Broadway and 5001 S. Halsted St. are no longer taking patients, according to their website. Food pantries are located at 4121 W. Lake St. in Garfield Park and 151 W. 75th St. in Greater Grand Crossing. Its location at 5543 N. Broadway in Edgewater is where pantry founder Lori Cannon still serves as director.

Cannon, 74, a lifelong Rogers Park resident, joined by social justice warriors and AIDS activists Greg Harris, Tom Tunney, James Cappleman, Arthur Johnston, and Matthew Hamilton created Open Hand Chicago in 1988 to feed those in the LG-BTQ community affected by HIV/AIDS in an era when the Reagan administration turned its back on these people.

"We had one thing in common," Cannon told Chicago Sun-Times columnist Neil Steinberg last December of the situation back then. "Everyone we knew was either dead, dying or struggling to help someone who was heading there. We were tired. We were scared. We were angry. And we needed to do something other than sew AIDS quilt panels."

"You can't buy shampoo, toothpaste or toilet paper with food stamps. An echo of tightfisted Dickensian notions of charity, making sure the shiftless poor won't be living it up on their dime, washing their hair and brushing their teeth and similar displays of wild extravagance," Steinberg wrote in his Dec. 23 opening of his column on the GroceryLand food pantry on Broadway.

For many years, Cannon's Open Hand operation delivered daily meals to homebound People Living With HIV and with AIDS [PLWH/A]. The meals were prepared in restaurants like Tunney's Ann Sather's and others as well as in local hospital kitchens, such as Thorek Memorial Hospital, 850 W. Irving Park Rd.

But as the mission shifted to allowing people to visit the pantry and prepare their own meals, the need arose to offer PLWH/A products that couldn't be purchased with governmental assistance. What Cannon received from donation nights at venues such as Sidetrack on Halsted and December holiday collections at area gay taverns allowed distribution of personal care items.

But the writing was on the wall concerning the viability of Heartland to survive. As Heartland imploded in early 2024, this reporter asked Cannon if she wished to talk about the situation. She declined, possibly wishing not to tempt fate or invite the in-

As Chicago strengthens immigrant protections for illegal aliens, downstate officials split on sanctuary laws

BY LILY CAREY
Illinois News Bureau

As the Trump administration has begun enacting mass deportations in recent weeks, activists and public officials in Chicago have been scaling up protections for illegal aliens.

Mayor Brandon Johnson and Gov. JB Pritzker have both vowed to leverage state law to limit such arrests, leading the Trump administration to sue the state, Cook county and Chicago over their respective sanctuary laws. The state's TRUSY Act, enacted in 2017, prevents local authorities from assisting Immigration and Customs Enforcement [ICE] with civil immigration enforcement or asking people about their immigration status.

But beyond the Chicago area, the landscape of local immigration laws is more mixed, and some lawmakers in downstate Illinois are trying to block those protections.

In 2023 and 2024, over a dozen Illinois counties and cities passed non-sanctuary laws or resolutions, explicitly stating that they don't intend to welcome illegal aliens — and many of these municipalities are doubling down on their non-sanctuary approach in the wake of President Donald Trump's push for mass deportations.

"We had a clear mandate from our voters that they wanted us to react with the more 'Trump way' of handling these immigration issues," Drew Muffler, chairman of the Grundy County Board, said in an interview. "We didn't want to find ourselves financially on the hook to have to provide accommodations (for incoming illegals)."

Grundy County was the first municipality in the state to enact a non-sanctuary ordinance in Dec. 2023. Muffler said the move was sparked by voter feedback on a 2020 referendum, where 64% of county residents said they preferred a more conservative approach to immigration law.

Like Grundy County, the counties that have enacted non-sanctuary laws did so when Texas began sending buses of illegal aliens to Illinois. Local officials hoped to send a message that they wouldn't welcome these buses after some began dropping them off in the suburbs with no warning, rather than a drop-off site in Chicago.

But with the TRUST Act in place state-wide, non-sanctuary resolutions in Grundy County and throughout the state have little legal power, even in the wake of Trump's changes to federal immigration policy.

"People have been asking, what is Grundy County going to do with the new facts on the table? And obviously we leaned on the sheriff for that question, and his answer is very simple: we have to, as of right now, follow the TRUST Act," Muffler said.

Under this law, state and local police are legally not allowed to assist ICE in federal civil immigration enforcement, as long as they don't prevent federal forces from doing their job. It applies to the entire state, even in communities that align more closely with Trump's approach to immigration law.

"Counties or cities or villages where, say, the local government may not be so inclined to resist immigration enforcement, they still cannot participate in immigration enforcement activities," Fred Tsao, senior policy counsel from the Illinois Coalition for Immigrant and Refugee Rights, said in an interview.

In the first few weeks of the Trump administration, this issue has mainly impacted the greater Chicago area, where the immigrant population is much higher. According to the ACLU of Illinois, there had been about 1,000 arrests nationally as of Feb. 7, with about 100 of these taking place in Chicago and its suburbs. The ACLU and local law enforcement officials said that they aren't aware of any ICE arrests outside the Chicago area.

Still, partisan opposition to the TRUST Act has become louder in Springfield. In January, Republican lawmakers introduced a bill that would overturn the TRUST Act, requiring local law enforcement to comply with ICE if necessary.

"It's my view that public safety is at greater risk when you restrict the ability for federal and state authorities to communicate with one another," said Sen. Andrew Chesney, lead sponsor of the Immigration Enforcement Act. "We have a responsibility to make sure that people are here legally, and that those that are not are quickly removed."

The Democratic supermajority in the state legislature — led by Senate President Don Harmon, and House Speaker

Emanuel "Chris" Welch, both of whom supported the TRUST Act in 2017 — is unlikely to support any challenge to the sanctuary law, Tsao said. The Immigration Enforcement Act is sponsored by three Republican senators and has yet to gain Democratic backing.

The strongest local sanctuary laws in the state are mostly in the greater Chicago area, in towns like Skokie, Berwyn and Oak Park. In Evanston, the city council recently signed off on additional protections for the city's sanctuary ordinance. It includes several additional protections for immigrants and city data on residents' immigration statuses, making it "perhaps one of the strongest (sanctuary laws) in the entire country," Tsao said.

"By taking these steps, the City of Evanston aims to uphold its values of community trust and safety while ensuring every resident has the opportunity to thrive," the city said in a statement. "Together, we are building a vibrant, inclusive community for all."

A handful of other municipalities in downstate Illinois have joined Chicago and some suburbs in their push for sanctuary laws. In 2017 and 2018, cities such as Normal and Urbana enacted local ordinances declaring that their communities welcomed illegal immigrants. These came in response to stricter immigration policies during Trump's first term.

In Normal, which has had a Welcoming Community Ordinance since 2018, Police Chief Stephen Petrilli said the police department's policy is to comply with the TRUST Act during any interactions with ICE and not to ask individuals about their immigration status during routine investigations.

Petrilli said his office has seen an influx of questions about immigration policy in the weeks since mass deportations began in Chicago.

"We've held several meetings with different community stakeholders," Petrilli said. "We're really just assuring the public that we are adhering to the state law."

Border protection: 'These are solvable problems'

Former Customs Cmsr. speaks on immigration, public safety

Dinner guests did a deep dive into immigration enforcement on Feb. 13, during the City Club of Chicago hosted dinner conversation featuring former U.S. Customs and Border Protection Commissioner, R. Gil Kerlikowske. The discussion, held in collaboration with the Univ. of Chicago Crime Lab, focused on the topic of immigration, the role of law enforcement at both state and local levels, and the broader implications for public policy.

City Club, through this event, brought together leaders from government, law enforcement, academia, and the nonprofit sector, fostering a critical dialogue on how to approach one of the most pressing issues facing the United States today.

Kerlikowske, who has held leadership roles in law enforcement for over four decades, including serving as chief of police in Seattle and drug policy advisor under the Obama administration, offered a nuanced perspective on immigration enforcement. Addressing a key misconception about crime and alien migrants, he stated, "Well, actually, your numbers [on undocumented immigrants] are about 37% lower than theirs [US citizens] is. And for people that are here legally in the country, they are 57% lower." He cited research from the Cato Institute, a conservative think tank, which found that immigrants are less likely to commit crimes than native-born citizens.

One of the key themes of the discussion was the failure of Congress to enact meaningful immigration reform. Kerlikowske criticized lawmakers for their inaction, explaining, "whenever you have a complex problem and somebody issued a simple answer, you can be assured of one thing that that's the wrong answer." He pointed out that past bipartisan efforts to pass comprehensive immigration legislation have repeatedly failed, leaving the executive branch to handle the issue through temporary policies.

The conversation moved onto

economic issues and impacts on immigration. Kerlikowske highlighted the essential role that immigrant labor plays in the American workforce, noting, "We need these people in the country. We need that work. If you're in South Carolina in the middle of summer, look who's working on a roof in 100 degrees or 110 degrees. They don't take jobs from Americans."

He said the demand for immigrant labor spans both skilled and unskilled sectors and current policies are failing to meet the needs of the U.S. economy.

"The last thing we should do is make people afraid to send their children to school, afraid to go to church, afraid to go get medical care at a hospital, because they're concerned that immigration agents are going to apprehend them," Kerlikowske said.

The role of local law enforcement in immigration enforcement is a significant concept, and Kerlikowske warned against using state and local police to enforce federal immigration laws, arguing that it damages community trust and ultimately makes cities less safe.

Beyond immigration, the discussion also covered gun violence and public safety in Chicago. The City Club and the Univ. of Chicago Crime Lab have worked extensively to find data-driven solutions to crime in the city, and the event emphasized how policing strategies can improve without resorting to over-policing.

"The academy built our research showing that improving management and practices in policing improved public safety without driving up arrests or using force," said Dan Gibbons, CEO of Chicago City Club, highlighting the importance of effective leadership in law enforcement.

The City Club continues to be an essential space for civic dialogue, bringing together policymakers, academics, and business leaders to address the city's most pressing challenges. By hosting conversations like this one, it fosters meaningful discussions that go beyond partisan talking points.

The participation of young people, including students—some of whom are immigrants themselves—adds fresh perspectives to these discussions. As a migrant myself, this reporter found the conversation both enlightening and necessary, especially for youth. Misconceptions about the immigration system remain widespread among native-born citizens, often blurring the line between truth and misinformation. The more citizens engage in open discussions, the more we can all uncover the realities of immigration.

The insights shared by Kerlikowske underscore the importance of fact-based policymaking, community trust, and pragmatic leadership in addressing immigration and public safety.

As Chicago and other cities grapple with these challenges, the conversation reaffirmed that "these are solvable problems" and that "it does come back to being able to see each other as communities." With immigration and law enforcement remaining critical issues on the national stage, the need for informed, collaborative, and compassionate solutions has never been more urgent.

On Feb. 11, the City Hall Committee on Finance approved $14 million in Tax-Increment Financing to launch a planned 78-unit affordable housing project near the site of the long-razed Cabrini-Green (photo left). Cabrini-Green rebirth funded with $14-million in TIF funds

The Home Front

by Don DeBat

Despite the overall failure of Cabrini-Green, and the eventual demolition of the once-notorious public-housing project, the Chicago Housing Authority [CHA] is on its way to repeating its mistake.

On Feb. 11, the City Hall Committee on Finance approved $14 million in Tax-Increment Financing [TIF] to launch a planned 78-unit affordable housing project near the site of the long-razed Cabrini-Green.

The $52.9 million mixed-income housing development is targeted for construction at 547 W. Oak St., a vacant lot owned by the CHA. Demolition of Cabrini-Green started in 2000 and was completed in 2011.

Although city officials approved the new low-income housing project in 2021, it still needs the City Council's approval. The TIF funding now heads to the full City Council for a final decision.

If TIF allocation is approved, the project will be fully funded. Financing secured for the complex includes a mix of CHA loan funds, state grants and low-income housing tax credits. A timeline for the completion of the project has not been provided.

Across Chicago, there are 124 TIF districts that are primarily utilized to spur development. When a TIF district is established, the property-tax revenue for government agencies is capped at the current level, as the baseline. As property values rise within the TIF, any additional tax dollars get scraped off into a separate surplus fund.

"That money does not go to schools, does not go to the parks, etc. It's captured by the TIF district in a sort of slush fund," said author Tom Tresser, who has studied and written extensively about TIF's through his TIF Illumination Project.

That does not mean schools and parks budgets don't still grow, it just means the growing demand by taxing bodies must be made up by properties located outside of TIF district. The final result is that ever dollar taken for a TIF district should be considered a property tax increase as that dollar must now come from some other property.

Ald. Burnett's Neighborhood

Ald. Walter Burnett Jr. [27th] said the lot at 547 W. Oak has remained vacant for more than 50 years. Burnett, who grew up in Cabrini-Green, said he remembers walking past the lot as a child. Now, as alderman of the ward, he will get to see that lot developed.

"It's refreshing to see a beautiful building going up there. There's going to be mixed-income that's going to allow folks who lived in the area who may have had to move [out] over 25 years ago," Burnett said of those forced out by the CHA's failure and demolition of Cabrini-Green.

There are 88 families on CHA's list for "right-of-return," which refers to "families who were originally living at Cabrini, as well as CHA families who chose Cabrini as their first, second and third option to return to redevelop sites," said Ahlam Khouri, director of development for CHA.

Once completed, the 78-unit apartment building will have 54 affordable units available to people making 30%, 60% and 80% of the area's median income. The remaining 24 apartments will be leased at market-rate rents.

According to plans, the building will have 39 indoor parking spots, 45 bicycle spots, a community room, fitness center and an outdoor patio on the second floor with a grilling area.

However, this planned initial 78-unit apartment building at Cabrini-Green II is only the tip of the iceberg.

The CHA wants to build a total of 4,080 new affordable units on the vacant Cabrini-Green land south of North Ave., and the apartments are not all proposed as low-rise buildings and row houses. Critics say that notorious high-rises and mid-rises are part of the plan. Most are affordable residences, and likely will include hundreds of Section-8 public-housing units.

It's as if we all forgot the government already tired this and failed spectacularly. The failure of Cabrini-Green was national news.

It's as if we all forgot the government already tired this and failed spectacularly. The failure of Cabrini-Green was national news.

Cabrini-Green a 'social experiment'

Cabrini-Green was launched in the late 1940s as a "social experiment," patterned after the federal government's Marshall Plan high-rise construction designed to rebuild Germany after World War II.

Over the next three decades, Cabrini-Green quickly became synonymous with poverty, violence and neglect. At its peak, the development consisted of 23 high-rise buildings that housed more than 15,000 low-income residents.

In the beginning, Elizabeth Wood, visionary head of CHA from 1937 through 1954, insisted on careful screening of the applicants. "In selecting tenants for public housing, the CHA looked particularly for former military officers with combat records, and wives known to be good housekeepers," wrote Adam Cohen and Elizabeth Taylor in "American Pharaoh," a book published by Little, Brown and Co. in 2000.

Unfortunately, the CHA abandoned Wood's careful attention to tenant selection. The principle behind Wood's tenant-selection process was that housing projects would only be healthy communities when careful thought was given to the tenants who would be allowed to move in.

"It only takes a very few, very antisocial people to make a building or a project unsatisfactory to parents who are concerned about their children," she once said.

Wood's tenant-selection process was abandoned not out of concern for civil liberties, but because the CHA was no longer concerned about the kind of communities that were being created," Cohen and Taylor wrote.

"The biggest problem after 1954, housing project tenants told me, was the breakdown in tenant selection—no real belief that you had to select self-respecting families," an aide to Wood told the authors. "The chronically unemployed, convicted criminals, and gang members were all ushered into the projects, and hardworking tenants who wanted a healthier environment for their children moved out."

"Making matters worse, the CHA all but abandoned Wood's

Counterfeit stamps

Photos show some of the counterfeit stamps seized over the weekend in Chicago. Courtesy U.S. Customs and Border Protection

U.S. Customs and Border Protections [CBP] officers assigned to the Anti-Terrorism Contraband Enforcement Team at the Chicago International Mail Branch stopped eight shipments containing a total of 161,860 counterfeit U.S. Forever stamps they announced on Feb. 13.

CBP claims there has been an uptick in counterfeit U.S. Postal Service postage stamps especially around the holidays to include high volume card holidays like Valentine's Day.

Authentic postage stamps are produced at the U.S. Bureau of Engraving & Printing in the United States, and while the print quality of the seized postage was poor, the counterfeit quality is improving, and the average consumer may not notice a difference from an authentic stamp.

All the parcels were arriving from China and if genuine, face value would be over $118,000.

CBP seized the stamps for violating trademark laws. Often officers use their knowledge and expertise to find fraudulent shipments. These stamps were determined to be counterfeit based on the very low invoice value, the routing, and the extraordinary efforts undertaken to conceal the stamps.

"Counterfeiters only care about making a profit. They don't care about the effect that fake postage has on your ability to send important mail and overall impacts the U.S. economy," said LaFonda D. Sutton-Burke, Director, Field Operations-Chicago. "Our officers and specialists are some of the most highly trained in the nation, and their level of expertise is evident with these seizures. CBP officers were able to identify these very realistic counterfeits and stop them from reaching their destinations."

"While the print quality of the seized postage was poor, the counterfeit quality is improving, and the average consumer may not notice a difference from an authentic stamp."

Uber driver gets 13 years for sexually assaulting female passenger, seven more for assaulting a child

A judge on Feb. 11 sentenced a man to 13 years in prison for raping a woman he picked up from a Lakeview bar while working as an Uber driver. He received an additional seven years for sexually abusing a child in a separate case, court records show.

Christopher Molina, 34, pleaded guilty to aggravated criminal sexual assault during the commission of another felony and criminal sexual abuse of a child younger than 13, according to court records. Judge Nicholas Kantas ordered him to serve the sentences consecutively.

In early June 2022, a 25-year-old woman told police she went out for a night of fun, stopping at Kirkwood Bar & Grill, then making her way to Jake's Pub, 2932 N. Clark, with co-workers. Video showed her leaving Jake's around 1:15 a.m.

The woman couldn't remember what happened until she woke up in the back seat of a car, her hands restrained by a Velcro-like tie. She noticed that she was in a well-lit residential parking garage with many other vehicles and personal property.

Christopher Molina

Prosecutors said a man entered the backseat, removed the woman's clothing, and raped her for about 15 minutes. The woman feared for her life during the assault and repeatedly told the man that she did not want to have sex with him and did not want it to happen, she said.

Following the assault, the man drove the victim to her parents' West Loop home. Prosecutors said he repeatedly told the victim that he was sorry, saying his behavior that night exposed his bad side and that his girlfriend was mean to him.

Chicago police traced the woman's Uber ride transactions, which showed her driver was named Christopher, and then spoke with the registered owner of the driver's car. The owner, who rents vehicles out, told police that Christopher Molina, 31, was the person who rented the car on the night of the attack.

Cops arrested Molina after the victim identified him in a photo lineup.

One year after charges were filed in the case, a grand jury indicted Molina on multiple counts of sexually assaulting and abusing a child in the 1700 block of N. Spaulding, according to court records.

A Chicago police database shows that the crime occurred in Feb. 2022, about four months before Molina allegedly attacked the woman in Lakeview.

Former Boystown security patrol officer will get at least 81 years in prison for sexually assaulting 13-year-old boy

Ronald Lye in a 2020 mugshot.

A suburban man who once worked as a security patrol officer on the streets of Boystown, even though he was a convicted felon, will soon be sentenced to a minimum of 81 years in prison for sexually assaulting a 13-year-old boy whom he met online.

We first reported on Ronald Lye's security work in 2015. Nearly five years later, in May 2020, Kane County prosecutors slapped him with the criminal assault charges.

Officials said Lye met with the boy repeatedly during five weeks in April and May 2020, driving to the teen's home and taking him to Lye's house in Aurora. He recorded his sexual con-

Holy Toledo! Migrant shoplifter with two active arrest warrants in Chicagoland heading to prison in Ohio

A Venezuelan migrant with two outstanding arrest warrants for failing to appear in court for two pending felony cases in the Chicago area has surfaced in Ohio. And by "surfaced," we mean he's been sent to prison in Ohio for shoplifting merchandise worth more than $10,000 from a Kohl's in suburban Toledo.

We mentioned mentioned Jhombeiker Martinez Quintero in Sept. 2023 after he was charged with shoplifting clothing and shoes worth $1,102 from Macy's on State St. A warrant has been out for his arrest since he failed to appear in court (for the third time) on Oct. 1, 2024.

It turns out that, just 11 days after he failed to appear for the Macy's case, Martinez-Quintero, 22, and another man were arrested for stealing $10,199.99 worth of merchandise from that Kohl's store in Perrysburg, OH, according to a local news outlet.

When Perrysburg Township cops spotted their getaway car, they pursued it across town until its three occupants bailed out, a twist no shoplifter would ever experience in pursuit-shy Chicago.

tact with the boy and knew the victim was 13, prosecutors claim.

In May 2020, shortly after We published a story about the sexual assault allegations, Lye submitted a lengthy email through the CWBChicago website in which he accused the 13-year-old boy of "lying...while being on a[n] adult dating website that requires you to be 18."

"He reached out to me, NOT me to him, he has an ID showing him to be of legal age and orders adult products etc with that ID and there is proof of it that will come out in court!!" Lye insisted in the message. "As far as anything we may have done, it was 100% consensual, nothing was forced, no abuse at all and he admitted too it with proof of such that will come out in along court ordered news article retractions."

Lye continued: "This person I was with is mature, manipulative [and] charming and he has been with multiple people NOT just me and lieing [sic] about his age etc again there is proof of that and will come out in court but unfortunately because he is a minor they have put all the blame on me." "He is very sexually active/experienced and he kept reaching out to me with his pushy manipulations, believable charm and lies during my week, depressing state of mind from social isolation/distancing/lack of work," Lye wrote.

None of those arguments held water last month when, after years of pre-trial maneuvering, Lye put his fate in the hands of Kane County Judge David Kliment.

At the end of the bench trial, Kliment found Lye guilty of 13 counts of criminal sexual abuse, 13 counts of manufacturing child pornography, and 19 counts of possessing child pornography, according to the Kane County State's Attorney's Office.

Kliment is expected to hand down Lye's sentence, which will be at least 81 years, on Feb. 28, the state's attorney's office said.

The Northalsted Business Alliance in 2015 said it was "reviewing its hiring process" when this reporter revealed that Lye was not authorized to work as a security guard after he was accused of taking people's money while posing as a police officer in Kane County in 1999.

Lye pleaded guilty to impersonating a police officer and illegal use of flashing blue lights in the case. Other charges, including armed robbery and armed violence, were dropped, according to his former attorney.

Lye and a co-worker allegedly extorted money from victims they encountered while posing as police when, in fact, they were security

"Martinez-Quintero climbed several fences and fled into a heavily wooded area before being apprehended. The pursuing officer sustained several injuries and was transported from the scene by EMS," according to the Bowling Green Sentinel-Tribune.

Last week, Martinez-Quintero received a one-year prison sentence on charges of grand theft and obstructing official business, the outlet reported.

One of Lye's alleged victims was an underage man from out of state who was caught drinking. The Beacon News, citing police reports, said the victim had been handcuffed and was told that he would be released in exchange for $100. An adult who was accused by the cop impersonators of buying the 20-year-old's beer also paid a "fine" to the guards, the paper reported.

After our report, Lye asked the state to reissue his license to work as an unarmed security guard. The Illinois Dept. of Financial and Professional Regulation agreed to give Lye a probationary permit the following year. Lye then returned to the Halsted St. patrol operation.

Woman who allegedly shot 'disrespectful' Red Line passenger gets 4 years

Erica Berry

A woman accused of shooting a man who became "disrespectful" on a Red Line train in downtown Chicago was given a four-year sentence on Monday.

Erica Berry, 39, pleaded guilty to a charge of aggravated discharge of a firearm before Judge James Obbish. Prosecutors dropped four counts of attempted murder, a more serious charge that Berry faced.

In May 2023, prosecutors said Berry was sitting alone on a northbound train when a 35-year-old man strolled over and started a conversation around 8 p.m.

Berry later told police that the man was flirting with her and that she "tried to let him down nicely," according to prosecutors, who said CTA surveillance cameras captured much of the incident.

But the man persisted by sitting down next to Berry, who nudged him away twice before he got up and sat near two other women on the opposite side of the train. The verbal back-and-forth between Berry and the man dragged on, prompting the two women to get up and move away, officials said.

Eventually, Berry pulled a gun from her purse and shot toward the man. The man didn't move, so Berry fired another shot, then shot him again as he tried to run through the doors to the next train car, prosecutors alleged.

A CTA canine security officer at the Roosevelt station heard gunshots coming from the platform and looked down the stairs as Berry bolted toward him. The guard followed Berry until Chicago police officers caught up with her about a block from the station.

CPD officers said they found a .22 caliber revolver in Berry's purse. The victim underwent surgery for gunshot wounds to his left hip and right elbow. One of Berry's defense attorneys argued that she may have been acting in self-defense of herself and in defense of the other women on the train.

Her four-year sentence will be reduced to two years for good behavior. It will be reduced by another 632 days for credits she has earned while in custody awaiting trial.

Member of Sinaloa Cartel charged with Drug Conspiracy

A federal grand jury in Chicago has indicted a high-ranking member of the Sinaloa Cartel in Mexico on a drug conspiracy charge for allegedly manufacturing and distributing fentanyl, cocaine, heroin, and other drugs and importing them into the United States.

According to an indictment returned Feb. 10 in the Northern District of Illinois, Ceferino Espinoza Angulo, 43, a dual citizen of the U.S. and Mexico, employed dozens of gunmen in Mexico to protect and support the leadership of the Guzman faction of the Sinaloa Cartel, including Ivan Guzman-Salazar, Jesus Alfredo Guzman-Salazar, Ovidio Guzman-Lopez, and Joaquin Guzman-Lopez, collectively known as "the Chapitos."

The indictment alleges that Espinoza Angulo worked with others to obtain fentanyl precursor chemicals and to manufacture fentanyl for importation into the United States.

Espinoza Angulo allegedly worked with others to transport the fentanyl, cocaine, heroin, methamphetamine, and ecstasy toward the U.S. border for importation into the country.

The indictment accuses Espinoza Angulo of illegally using a machine gun in furtherance of his drug trafficking crime.

The Chapitos are the sons of Joaquin Guzman Loera, also known as "El Chapo," who led the Sinaloa Cartel before being convicted by a federal jury in Brooklyn, N.Y., and sentenced to life in prison. The Chapitos allegedly assumed their father's role as leaders of the Sinaloa Cartel. The Chapitos have been charged with drug trafficking in other U.S. indictments.

Dog dies after stepping on electrified manhole cover in River North

BY CWBCHICAGO

A large dog was killed in River North on Feb. 15 when it apparently made contact with an electrified manhole cover, according to witnesses and other officials. People who work and live in the area believe other dogs have been shocked at the same location recently.

“We were inside working and heard several yelps. By the time we were notified a dog was deceased outside, it was too late to start CPR otherwise we would have,” said Kristen A., who also posted about the incident on Nextdoor. “Several bystanders were kind enough to stay with the young gentleman who owned the dog who was inconsolable.”

“We covered the dog with a sheet until the police arrived. The rest of the family arrived and were even more inconsolable, understandably,” Kristen explained. She said the police helped the family place the dog in their car.

Shortly after the dog was killed, the fire department responded to a report of an electrical pole fire across the street from where the incident occurred, but it is unclear if the incidents were related.

A ComEd spokesperson said the incident involved a “non-ComEd owned manhole,” but its crews responded to provide support while the incident was investigated.

Kristen said workers opened an electrical box, but she said she didn’t know what they did. People continued to come and go on the sidewalk, which was not closed to foot traffic.

“We ended up putting signs on the box since we are still unclear if the problem has been fixed.”

While Chicago police responded to the scene and requested a response from the city’s Bureau of Electricity, a CPD spokesperson said they had no information about the matter. We sent inquiries to other city departments over the weekend and await replies.

Angulo charges him with drug conspiracy and a firearm offense, which are punishable by a maximum sentence of life in federal prison and a minimum of 30 years.

Espinoza Angulo is believed to be residing in Mexico. A U.S. warrant has been issued for his arrest.

The indictment was announced by multiple federal agents and officers with the Dept. of Justice, FBI, DEA and other law enforcement agencies.

The case is part of an Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force operation that identifies, disrupts, and dismantles drug trafficking organizations and other criminal networks that threaten the United States using a prosecutor-led, intelligence-driven, multi-agency approach that leverages the strengths of federal, state, and local enforcement agencies.

Red Line attacker hit victim with two-foot pipe, had railroad spikes in his jacket

BY CWBCHICAGO

Prosecutors have charged a man with attacking a CTA passenger with a metal pipe as they rode the Red Line near Addison on Feb. 10. Perdido Cook, 44, of Harvey, still had the pipe as well as two railroad spikes when Chicago police officers arrested him on the train minutes later, officials said.

Perdido Cook

The 50-year-old victim boarded a northbound train at Belmont, grabbed a seat, and closed his eyes around 12:40 p.m., prosecutors said in a detention petition. Cook allegedly walked up to the man and struck him in the face with a two-foot metal pipe, striking him beneath the right eye. Personnel at Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center closed the wound, described by prosecutors as a “deep laceration,” with stitches.

Other passengers called 911 and police found Cook lying across the train seats when they arrived at the Addison station. CPD’s arrest report said Cook had two railroad spikes in his jacket and the metal pipe. Judge Anthony Calabrese detained Cook on charges of aggravated battery with a deadly weapon and aggravated battery of a transit passenger.

Calabrese noted in his detention order that Cook received a three-year prison sentence in 2022 for aggravated battery of a peace officer. A River Forest Police Dept. crime blotter indicates Cook was arrested in their town on Feb. 2; however, no charges related to that arrest appeared in court records as of Feb. 16.

Lakeview High choir to perform at St. James Cathedral

The Advanced Choir at Lake View High School has been engaging in a program this year called Emerging Voices with the William Ferris Chorale [WFC], and will put on a show at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 22, at the St. James Cathedral, 65 E. Huron St.

Students have had the opportunity to work with composer Cristian Larios to write a new piece of music that will be premiered at the WFC's Ready, Bright concert at St. James.

In addition to premiering this new work with the professional singers, the Advanced Choir will also perform their own set of three songs.

“Is the American Dream at the expense of the American Negro?”

Debate: Baldwin vs. Buckley, presented by TimeLine Theatre is currently playing inside Cortelyou Commons, 2324 N. Fremont St. The historic student gathering space built in 1929 on DePaul’s Lincoln Park campus is an academic setting with a beautiful Gothic Collegiate design that replicates Cambridge Union, where the original debate was held on February 18, 1965.

Once inside Cortelyou Commons, audiences will witness an epic confrontation that pitted Baldwin’s call for a moral revolution in race relations against Buckley’s unabashed elitism and implicit commitment to the status quo.

“Presenting this on the 60th anniversary of their debate will illuminate what progress has occurred in our country and what troubling comparisons still can be made with arguments from 1965,” said TimeLine Artistic Director PJ Powers.

“The objective of the american vicarious in restaging this historic debate is not to inhabit such monumental figures as James Baldwin or William F. Buckley, their shoes are too large to fill,” said Christopher McElroen, Founding Artistic Director of the american vicarious. “Rather, our objective is to simply place their words, which still resonate 60 years later, within the voice of contemporary artists.”

Debate: Baldwin vs. Buckley will end its five-week run March 2. For tickets visit timelinetheatre.com or call the TimeLine Box Office at (773) 281-8463 x6.

Upcoming events at Experimental Sound Studio in Ravenswood

Founded in 1986, Experimental Sound Studio [ESS] is one of the U.S.’s first non-profit cultural institutions dedicated entirely to sonic arts. It remains the only such organization in the Midwest, fostering innovative and experimental music where the unexpected is encouraged. ESS provides platforms for sound-based creation, presentation, documentation, and exploration.

Intro to Microsound, 4-part Max/MSP Gen course

Experimental Sound Studio [ESS], in partnership with the Center for Concrete and Abstract Machines, presents Intro to Microsound, a four-week course introducing students to the Gen~ programming environment inside MaxMSP. The course explores sound at the microscopic level, inspired by Curtis Roads’ groundbreaking work in Microsound (2001).

“Beneath the level of the note lies the realm of microsound, of sound particles,” Roads writes. “Recent technological advances let us probe and explore the beauties of this formerly unseen world.”

Led by instructors familiar with this technique, the workshop will examine how Gen~ enables the visual patching and coding of audio at the individual sample level—processing sound at rates exceeding 41,000 times per second. Over the four weeks, participants will progress from constructing sound one sample at a time to creating complex, dynamic sonic textures using microsound techniques such as granular and pulsar synthesis. The course will also introduce multichannel and hardware applications, including mc.gen~ and OopsyDaisy.

Classes take place in person at ESS, 5925 N. Ravenswood Ave., on four Thursdays from 6 to 8 p.m., Feb. 27, Mar. 6, Mar. 20, and Mar. 27. The workshop fee covers all four sessions, and due to the progressive nature of the course, individual session reservations will not be available.

Chicago Creative Machines Lecture & Performance Series returns Feb. 23

The Chicago Creative Machines lecture-performance series is back, featuring artists who integrate machine learning and related tools into their creative work. This free series invites audiences to explore the intersections of AI, sound, and artistic experimentation through lectures and performances from leading practitioners.

The second installment of the series kicks off on Feb. 23, with a presentation by Patrícia Alves-Oliveira. On Mar. 2, Ted Moore will lead a workshop on FluCoMa, a toolkit for machine learning in creative music applications. The series continues on Mar. 9, with a talk by Caitlyn Min-ji Au, followed by Bryan Pardo on Mar. 16.

All events will take place in person at ESS, 5925 N. Ravenswood Ave. and will be streamed live online for remote viewing. For more information and to reserve a spot. Recordings from Chicago Creative Machines Series I (2024) are also available for viewing.

Patchbent Meetup: A Gathering for Gender-Expansive Artists in Sound

On Feb. 28, from 5 to 8 p.m., the Patchbent community will host a casual meetup at Dark Matter Coffee’s Star Lounge, 2521 W. Chicago Ave.

Patchbent is a learning community for women, trans, non-binary, and gender-expansive people in sound and related practices. This free meetup provides a space to connect, share work, and exchange ideas. Participants are welcome to present finished pieces, works in progress, or new ideas, with a suggested presentation time of 5-10 minutes. A simple stereo sound system, microphone, and projector will be available for use.

Attendees can RSVP and indicate whether they’d like to present their work via <https://ess.org/>.

All experience levels are welcome, and no prior experience is necessary.

Roger and James Deakins will be appearing at the Athenaeum Center for Thought and Culture Feb. 25-28.

Meet Academy Award-winning cinematographer Feb. 25-28

BY BOB KITSOS

Movie fans may be familiar with the cinematography in “Shawshank Redemption,” “No Country for Old Men,” and “ Fargo.” It’s the work of Roger Deakins, winner of two Academy Awards and 16 nominations, and one of the most influential Western cinematographers. His films often are regarded as modern classics because of his ability to invoke old, artistic traditions in a modern context.

Deakins and his collaborator/wife, James, (aka Team Deakins) will be front and center during three film, photography and live podcast events this month to support Athenaeum Center for Thought and Culture, 2936 N. Southport.

The first event is a fundraising dinner on Feb. 25 with Roger and James Deakins that includes a live auction and Q&A with Lawrence Daufenbach, Athenaeum Center executive director. A film screening of “No Country for Old Men” will be shown on Feb. 27 with a separate, ticketed meetand-greet opportunity with Team Deakins prior to the screening that includes a signed copy of BYWAYS, Deakins’ photography monograph.

On Feb. 28, the pair will host a live recording of the Team Deakins podcast in conversation with Chicago-based location scout Stefan Nikolov. All events will be held at the Athenaeum Center for Thought and Culture. More details and ticket information are at athenaeumcenter.org/special-events.

In addition to these events, the Rogers Deakins Photography Exhibition will be available for viewing at the Athenaeum Center. The five-decades exhibition is an expansive, curated selection of 43 portraits and landscapes from Deakins’ personal collection as well as two never-before-seen photographs that were taken in Chicago last fall. The exhibition will be open on Tuesdays and Fridays from noon to 4 p.m. in the center’s Paradiso Gallery through April 30.

practice of investigating the backgrounds and qualifications of prospective tenants," the authors wrote. "By the time the last Robert Taylor Homes buildings were filled, there was almost no screening at all."

As could be expected, the government's social 'experiment' resulted in the unexpected consequences that planners never seem to see coming, but that Wood knew would occur.

The buildings that had the least tenant screening, at the southern extreme of the project, "ended up having some of the worst problems with delinquency and crime," the authors wrote.

Now, the new Cabrini-Green "finalized master plan," which the CHA says will be implemented starting in 2025 beginning with the 547 W. Oak project, essentially repeats the great 1950s landmark public-housing boondoggle drafted by planners at the request of the late Mayor Richard J. Now, the new Cabrini-Green "finalized master plan," which the CHA says will be implemented starting in 2025 beginning with the 547 W. Oak project, essentially repeats the great 1950s landmark public-housing boondoggle drafted by planners at the request of the late Mayor Richard J. Daley, who falsely believed that stacking poor people in high-rises would solve the city's slum-housing problems.

were dangerous giant warehouses of poverty that were controlled by violent criminal street gangs, and impossible to police.

Ironically, Mayor Richard M. Daley, son of Richard J. Daley, was the visionary mayor who razed Cabrini-Green, Robert Taylor Homes and Ida B. Wells projects to correct his father's mistake.

LEGO-like structures

Old Town resident and real estate financial expert Timothy J. Carew made the following analysis of the new Cabrini-Green plans: "Relying solely on professional planners has its limits. While their proposals are often accompanied by colorful renderings of building sites and LEGO-like structures, they frequently lack a comprehensive vision."

Critics say clustering and stacking thousands of new CHA units on valuable land that developers now consider the West Gold Coast, South Old Town and River North neighborhoods will likely increase crime and traffic congestion, and set safe, market-rate and mixed-income residential development back decades. The only sane way to develop affordable housing in Chicago is to mix and sprinkle-in low-rise units in every city neighborhood, housing experts note.

The billion-dollar Cabrini-Green II land needs to be marketed for its highest and best use. Sell it at top prices to luxury housing developers, and builders of market-rate apartments and affordable units. Only 20% of this land should be developed for Section-8 housing. The city does not need to experiment with warehousing poverty in high rises again.

If the land were sold at appraised prices today, imagine how many thousands more affordable and Section 8 units could be developed scattered across the city.

Looking forward with the new plan for the rebirth of Cabrini-Green, a veteran Old Town resident made the following suggestion: "Just like Chicago police and firefighters are required to live within the city limits, Chicago Housing Authority employees should be required to reside in a CHA project, which they and/or their superiors approve as safe and habitable."

"I just can't in good conscience walk away," Cannon told Steinberg in 2024. "People need to be fed. They need to be housed. Food is medicine, as it's always been..."

What will happen now with the closure of Heartland's food pantries and health clinics? Steinberg placed the blame squarely where it belongs in an email to this reporter. "Lori Cannon has always been a front-line fighter, back to the darkest days of AIDS, and it's sad that while she was busy hustling to get food into the mouths of hungry people, the people tasked with maintaining Heartland let it fall down around her."

"I can't pretend to be privy to the complexities of the collapse," Steinberg continued. "But a well-tended organization would not just implode like that. My heart breaks for Lori, because this is her life's work. But I also know she's a tough old bird, and that she and the team she has assembled around her will pick themselves up and continue the fight, alone if necessary, as they always have."

Cannon insists neither the implosion of Heartland nor the nation's lurch toward increasing intolerance will affect anything. Stay tuned for new pantry developments.

Full disclosure. This reporter volunteered at Lori's food pantry for eight years until 2012.

Fundraising campaign underway for Trebes Park

The Trebes Park Advisory Council is now raising funds for Trebes Park, 2250 N. Clifton Ave., for the work that is now underway and on track to be completed by this Spring.

In preparation for the newly renovated park, the Advisory Council is kicking off a campaign to raise funds to support various initiatives, including more programming and supplemental maintenance not covered by the Park District.

This campaign is seeking donations of $500 or $1,000. All contributors will receive an engraved brick in the new walkway leading through the garden.

This who wish to help out can make a donation via credit card and provide your desired inscription by visiting <https://trebespark.com/donate/> by March 1. The reason for the deadline is to install bricks before the grand opening. For more information write to trebespark@gmail.com.

Pet adoption event Feb. 22

Chicago Animal Care and Control [CACC] has announced the return of its annual "Love is in the Air" adoption event, offering fee-waived adoptions for all available pets, on Saturday, Feb. 22 at the CACC shelter located at 2741 S. Western. The dedicated staff and volunteers will be available to help adopters find the right match and ensure a successful transition for both pet and adopter.

Adoption fees are also being waived all month long for long-term residents who have been at the shelter for 30 days or more, giving these pets a chance of finding homes.

All adoptable pets are spayed/neutered, vaccinated, microchipped, and ready to go home the same day. Adoptions are processed on a first-come, first-served basis, so arrive early.

Man shot in Rogers Park

BY CWBCHICAGO

A man is in serious condition after being shot in Rogers Park Feb. 17, according to Chicago police. He is the third person shot in the neighborhood this year.

In a brief media statement, CPD said the 28-year-old “was in a vehicle when he sustained a [gunshot wound] to the torso and shoulder” in the 1300 block of West Estes around 12:20 a.m.

Officers at the scene initially said the man told them someone in a blue vehicle shot him on nearby Sheridan Rd. But cops found shell casings in the 1300 block of W. Estes, where the man was discovered. His car had a bullet defect, too.

From the start, biking activists owned the agenda. The biking lobby got everything they wanted from the start, with the coming greenway on Granville, including east and westbound lanes that even encourage bikes to go the wrong way on one-way sections of street. Yes, in Illinois it’s against the law for bicyclists to ride the wrong way on one-way streets. Bicyclists must obey the same traffic laws as motor vehicles. The privilege to violate traffic laws free from the fear of getting ticketed is one of the reasons why many Chicagoans now see the biking community as privileged.

The Alderman admitted on Feb. 15 that the changes coming to Granville are a done deal, and indeed they may have been all along.

The Potemkin village set up by the Chicago Dept. of Transportation [CDOT] at Misericordia on Oct. 15, 2024, was all for show for the 200-plus people who came out thinking that the city really wanted community input.

But shortly after that Oct. 15 meeting, surveyors were out on Granville (see page 1 photo), and they told this reporter that they were there working for CDOT on engineering the street for the privileged bike paths and one-way traffic.

Nothing the community said was going to change CDOT’s plans, which is why they felt so assured in sending out the surveyors right after their meeting. CDOT always intended to force their changes on the community.

“It’s a done deal,” said Ald. Manaa-Hoppenworth at the church at 5944 N. Magnolia, as the audience grew aware that they may have been wasting their time all along. (The second part of the Alderman’s Feb. 15 talk was over the City’s plans for a massive upzoning on Broadway. It was given before an audience made freshly skeptical, and thinking that another done deal could be in place.)

During the Alderman’s presentation, she repeatedly stressed the danger of heavy auto traffic on Granville without addressing the problematic one-way traffic blockages that will force traffic onto other residential streets, or the bigger reality that as long as Lake Shore Dr. ends at Edgewater’s front door, the community is going to deal with heavy pass-through commuter traffic, as it has for almost 70 years.

The alderman said that CDOT claims that 83% of vehicles crashes in the community are created by commuter pass-through traffic, though they are refusing to share that evidence to back up that statement. Many of the accidents that are occurring along Granville they claim happen when cars are making 90-degree turns.

Yet by creating forced turns for all vehicles at the points where they meet one-way streets - the intersections of Broadway, Clark, Ridge and Western - the city will be increasing the chances of people getting hit in turning accidents. CDOT has not undertaken any study over the potential impact of a plan that will force every single vehicle to make turns off Granville.

And frankly, what residents are seeing is that CDOT doesn’t really want their advice nor is seeking any consent. On Feb. 13, CDOT held one of the virtual meetings that have become popular post-pandemic with government entities who know they can silence opposition and stifle uncomfortable questions with a virtual meeting.

The Feb. 13 Zoom meeting featured monologues by city officials with no live comments by citizens allowed, or even written comments by citizens in a chatbox that was intentionally disabled by CDOT. Meanwhile, questions typed into the Q&A page by the over 150 people attending the virtual meeting were either ignored, or reinterpreted and restated by a CDOT staffer.

Virtual meetings are now the preferred venue of bureaucrats who must present plans to citizens, since they provide government bodies the ability to censor free speech through control of the “mute” button. The mute button allows public officials to magically ignore their audience and their questions, by pretending those questions do not exist if they never have to hear them.

Virtual meetings deny residents the chance to openly question ideas before other witnesses, or to take the tenor of the people at an in-person meeting, and to see and listen to others’ opinions from people who may or may not share their own point of view.

Area residents saw this kind of overt censorship earlier during the in-person meeting at Misericordia when CDOT officials informed the full audience they would not be allowed to speak up or ask questions during the main public portion of their presentation, as when CDOT staffer David Smith rudely shouted down residents from across the room who did try to speak up, as only CDOT’s statements were permitted.

And frankly, what residents are seeing is that CDOT doesn’t really want their advice nor is seeking any consent.

In contrast, on Feb. 15 area residents got to pepper their Alderman with pertinent questions as she bravely stood before her constituents in person answering them. That kind of real democracy does not occur online.

This fait accompli effort may be why CDOT also refuses to share any of the raw traffic data they claimed to have collected on Granville, and claimed to have used to base their decisions on. It is data that some community residents suspect is contrived, and manipulated to fit a narrative. CDOT’s intentional opacity, and their dismissal of community concerns over the legitimacy of the data only made those suspicions worse.

This reporter asked CDOT officials five times during the Feb. 13 virtual meeting if they would share their raw traffic data with the community, and the question was ignored all five times by CDOT. One Edgewater area community block club has now filed a Freedom of Information Act requests for that data, but so far they have received no response back from the city.

RPM Phase One Lawrence to Bryn Mawr Modernization work continues to make progress in the final major stage of construction. After rebuilding the northbound Red and Purple elevated track structure in 2023, CTA is nearing completion of the southbound Red Line structure and four new, fully accessible Red Line stations at Lawrence, Argyle, Berwyn and Bryn Mawr. The new stations and tracks are expected to open this summer.

Edgewater Historical Society hosts 37th Annual Meeting, Mar. 1

The Edgewater Historical Society will hold its 37th Annual Meeting and Program 10 a.m. March 1, at the Ismaili Jamatkhana Social Hall, 1124 W. Rosemont Ave.

This year’s event will feature Bonnie McDonald, President & CEO of Landmarks Illinois, as the keynote speaker. McDonald will present “The Relevancy Project: Building a More Relevant Historic Preservation Movement.” Launched in 2021 as Landmarks Illinois celebrated its 50th anniversary, the initiative explores how to advance historic preservation over the next 50 years. The project aims to address key challenges, identify opportunities, showcase innovative solutions, and inspire collective action toward a more inclusive and impactful preservation movement.

Bonnie McDonald, President & CEO of Landmarks Illinois

The annual meeting will also include the presentation of candidates for the Edgewater Historical Society’s Board of Directors and a discussion of plans for 2025-26.

The program is free and open to the public, with light refreshments provided. No reservations are required.
