So you want to get into the major leagues. The Cubs? the White Sox? Maybe the 'Hawks?

Andy Clark might be the guy you need to talk to.

Not to get you a spot on the team, but on the business end of big time big money professional sports.

The onetime head of ticket sales for DePaul Univ. now heads DePaul's Dreihaus Business School's sports management and marketing for undergraduate and MBA-level students looking for front office careers.

In the 1980s, only three colleges had sports management programs in the U.S. Flash forward through a "Jerry Maguire" movie, billion-dollar sports franchise sales, and 25-million American viewers tuning into the 2014 World Cup, and you have natural growth in sports management programs throughout the country.

Among the 300 such programs that exist today, proximity to top tier organizations and professionalism is what makes DePaul's program stand out, says Clark.

Students take courses in sports management, marketing, sports economics, and sports law, leadership and journalism, along with the more standard degree-track course, said Clark, who considers the classroom work only the start of the trip.

Clark, after all, believes in hands-on experience.

43rd Ward aldermanic race gets personal as days count down

Joe Feldman of the Gold Coast Neighbors Assoc. reminds Ald. Michele Smith and challenger Caroline Vickrey that "80% of our neighborhood votes" before the start of a March 23 debate at the Public Hotel, 1301 N. State.

Ald. Michele Smith refused to apologize for accusing challenger Caroline Vickrey of not paying her "fair share" of the property taxes on her home during a March 22 debate sponsored by the Gold Coast Neighbors Assoc. at the Public Hotel, 1301 N. State St.

At the same time, Vickrey declined to apologize to Ald. Smith for making an issue of the alderman working part-time as a consultant to a suburban arts foundation.

Vickrey had come under fire at another debate a week earlier at the Steppenwolf Theater, where the candidates got down to business after several verbal swings at each other.

The alderman claimed a misclassification of Vickrey's home resulted in "thousands of dollars in improper property tax reductions," but the Cook County Assessor's Office said the classification on her home is correct. The classification is the result of a home improvement exemption which are available to all homeowners. Tax records still listed the house as a multi-unit residence even though the building had been converted to a single-family house eight years ago. The property is currently valued at $1.3 million, instead of the $1.8 million the property was assessed at before tax appeals were filed in 2012 through 2014.

"Caroline is very willing to increase our property taxes, but I'm afraid Ms. Vickrey isn't necessarily paying her own fair share of the property taxes. Her own home is a 100-year-old renovated sin-

First construction on Lane Tech campus in 60 years

$50 million renovation scheduled to start in next week

BY DEBAT MEDIA SERVICES

A $50-million renovation of Lane Tech College Prep High School, 2501 W. Addison St., is scheduled to begin April 1 and continue through early 2017.

"In what will be the first major construction project at Lane Tech in more than 60 years, the renovation will include replacing the entire roof of our historic H-shaped building, brick tuck pointing and new windows," said Lane Tech Principal Dr. Christopher Dignam.

Dignam won't be there to see it finished though, effective July 1 he has accept a position as principal of Deerfield High School.

Our "first focus is on the badly deteriorated roof and drains," said Damir Ara, a Lane Tech assistant principal. "Tyler Lane Construction, the general contractor, is most likely going to start by replacing the old roof with a new temporary roof to stop the leaks."

Masonry, windows and floors will be the focus in the second phase of the massive project, which is being funded under the Capital Improvement Program for Chicago Public Schools.

"Plans involve exterior brick tuck pointing where necessary, lintel work, and replacement of all windows and floors in the building," Ara said.

Window replacement is scheduled to start in September. In addition, the entire school will be painted and air conditioned.

"When the work is completed Lane Tech will enjoy the same quality facilities currently found at other new top-tier city schools," Dignam said.

The leafy, 30-acre Lane Tech campus and its castle-like clock tower has been a landmark at Addison St. and Western Ave. in the Roscoe Village neighborhood since the school opened in September of 1934.

Designed in 1930 by architect Paul Gerhardt to be the foremost technical school in the country, Lane Tech was built at a cost of $6.5 million, the largest federal grant awarded to any one building project in the heart of the Great Depression, noted Maggie Byrne, Lane Tech historian and a 2007 graduate.

In 2014, the historic Lane Tech clock tower was restored by Scott Vessalo, a dedicated Lane Tech physics teacher and engineer who volunteered to do repairs on the clock tower. "The clock tower movement repairs were completed in June of 2014, and the four clocks are now keeping accurate time," Vessalo said.

The lighting of the four clock faces will still require replacement of flood lights, but that portion of the repair is planned for completion during the 2015 academic year, Vassalo said.

"The clock tower is one of the Lane Tech's most iconic architectural features," noted Assistant Principal Sarah Hanly. "It is showcased on the senior class ring, on the school website, school memorabilia, and much more."

Talking issues in the 43rd Ward

Tony Lincoln Park finds itself divided as election approaches

Heart of the 'Hood

By Felicia Dechter

Caroline Vickrey, say are most important. We asked the pair to tell us what they considered the critical issues on the streets of 43, and here is what they had to say.

Economic Development and jobs are critical to the future of the 43rd Ward, said Ald. Smith. "We will be rolling out a draft plan for the economic development focusing on each of our key shopping/dining areas of the ward: Clark St., Lincoln Ave., and Armitage/Halsted," she said. "This plan centers on our key strengths [like] the huge number of cultural and culinary institutions in our neighborhood - to attract tourists and visitors to Lincoln Park because many restaurants and shops draw 75% of their business from outside of [their] neighborhood patrons."

One of Smith's priorities is helping small businesses. "We decreased the number of licenses small businesses need by nearly 40%, streamlined the bureaucratic practices in City Hall, and eliminated the 'head tax,'" said Ald. Smith. "Our 43rd Ward office helps local businesses start up and stay in business, working with city departments to get their permits and licenses efficiently."

Ald. Smith said that during her tenure, retail vacancies have decreased by 50% on Clark St. and 30% on the Armitage/Halsted corridor. "We used the innovative strategy of having the city sue landlords on Armitage Ave. and Clark St. who refused to lease vacancies to willing tenants," she said. "We made landlords re-invest in their properties and lease their spaces. We work with our local Chamber of Commerce to attract businesses."

Yet despite all that Ald. Smith says she has done, "We need a retail resurgence in our neighborhood," said Vickrey.

"We have many suffering retail corridors, which have suffered from lack of attention over the past four years," said Vickrey. "The alderman's approach to retail has been combative and out of touch. She filed building code violations against a local landlord, which backfired and resulted in local businesses having to move out of their spaces, has allowed local businesses' licenses to languish in bureaucracy, and three of the 10 businesses featured on her Web site as late as this winter were closed businesses - Hanig's, Isabelle's restaurant and an online business."

"I plan to set up a development corporation to do an asset mapping of the ward, and come up with a ward wide retail attraction strategy that will bring in businesses that locals will patronize, and work hand in hand with the Chamber of Commerce and local merchants associations to support our existing businesses as vital parts of our community."

Public Safety

"Crime is an issue that concerns many 43rd Ward residents, but our alderman's approach to crime is indifference and one-off publicity stunts," said Vickrey.

There has been a "lack of candor and information" about crime during the past four years, said Vickrey. "We had to learn about a shooting on the alderman's own block in the Sun-Times, and about other muggings and attacks in local papers and crime blogs, rather than community alerts from the reduce theft from unlocked or inadequately secured garages, cars, and homes."

Smith said additionally, she worked with the 19th District to develop a special car committed to issues surrounding homelessness.

"I volunteer as a court advocate, going to court with ward residents who have been the victims of crime, and obtain stiffer sentences for offenders who commit crimes in the 43rd Ward," said Ald. Smith. "Our message is clear: crime is not welcome in the 43rd Ward."

Schools/Education

One of the alderman's primary goals is keeping young families in the city. "A great education system alderman's office," said Vickrey. "Now that she is in a campaign in a hotly-contested run-off, she has issued one of her first email community alerts."

Yet Ald. Smith, a former federal prosecutor, said she has been "laser-focused" on crime and public safety. "Crime is down across the board in the 43rd Ward, and we're going to continue our efforts into the next term," she said.

Since 2010, property crime is down 29%, burglaries are down 45%, robberies are down 45%, violent crime is down 21%, and car thefts are down 37%, according to Ald. Smith.

[This newspaper, and other local media, have done extensive coverage over the last few years pointing out major flaws in how the city measures crime. The veracity of the city's stated crime numbers are questionable.]

She said the ward's eight-point crime reduction plan has gotten results, including the 18th District's successful effort to focus on North Ave. Beach, where gang activity and mob actions have been a problem, with horse and ATV patrols, pulling police officers out from behind desks and putting them back on the streets and a police foot patrol on Clark St.

The ward's block by block crime program facilitates meetings between residents and police to custom-tailor a crime prevention plan for a residence, a building, or an entire block, said Ald. Smith. "We identify crime 'hot spots' in the ward and advocate for increased police presence there," she said. "Our 'Lock Your Door' campaign publicized ways everyone can is the key to that goal," she said. In four years, she's expanded Lincoln Elementary while preserving LaSalle Language Academy, said Ald. Smith. Alcott Elementary School's Field of Dreams and a new playground at Newberry Academy are also being built. "And I look forward to embracing our newest addition to 43rd Ward schools, Oscar Mayer," she said.

Her goal for the next four years is to make Lincoln Park High School, "the place that everyone wants to go to. I lobbied successfully for LPHS to receive the wall-to-wall IB program," said Ald. Smith. "This important step raised overall academics at the school. Now we are addressing the capital and other needs of the school."

CPS has spent more than $9 million in the last four years to upgrade infrastructure at the LPHS, but more needs to be done, said Ald. Smith. "We are working with the Local School Council, the principal, and parents to plan for what we want for the high school and get it what it needs," she said.

New playgrounds and fields associated with schools are part of our overall open space in the ward, and are an amenity for everyone, said Ald. Smith. "I will work with our neighborhood groups to revitalize more neighborhood parks and playgrounds," she said.

Vickrey, a staunch community activist where education is concerned, has pledged to "work with local schools to help all of our schools perform at the highest levels, and to make common sense decisions to focus our scarce resources on good facilities for our students."

"I have dedicated thousands of hours of volunteer time -- without pay -- to neighborhood schools and I plan to hold Annual Education Summits to discuss best practices in education and to help develop a comprehensive plan to improve all schools in the 43rd Ward," she said.

Divisive development

Ald. Smith has accomplished no successful development in the ward in her four years in office, said Vickrey. "Three projects have been plunged into lawsuits, one of which she encouraged (Lincoln Park Hospital) and two of which she caused by alienating the surrounding neighbors by [using a] failed process, by breaking her promise not to allow high rises and large scale retail, and turned on them by saying, 'If you don't like it, then sue me,'" said Vickrey. "She has failed to get community agreements in three neighborhood projects, and two others sit stagnating without progress."

"I pledge to create a more proactive, transparent and inclusive process that brings neighbors into the process early on, builds consensus and reaches compromises with the appropriate stakeholders to get smart development moving forward."

Ald. Smith said she is looking forward to the construction phase at the former Children's Memorial site, "which will start now that the lawsuit filed against it by my opponent has been dismissed," she said. "Finally, the developer can close and begin construction. Struggling neighborhood businesses will all benefit as the lawsuit ends and construction begins."

Rats, constituent services, focusing on the future of the Gold Coast, and city and school finances are a few of the other local issues touched on by the two opponents. Although they both seem to have clear visions, "We are divided as a ward due to a failure of leadership on many different ward issues," concluded Vickrey.

Dresses collected through April 11 for Prom Goes Green

The Glass Slipper Project [GSP] is collecting new and gently used dresses for girls in need of prom clothing this season.

The effort is part of Prom Goes Green [PGG], a partnership between GSP and clothing recycler USAgain to let Chicago-area high school students pick out a dress at no cost to wear to their school's prom.

The clothing drive also provides an opportunity for people looking to donate and recycle their gently used special occasion dresses.

"This is a win-win for these students and the environment," USAgain CEO Mattias Wallander said. "Students have the opportunity to help the environment while finding a prom dress that is cost effective."

Outfits will be made available at boutique events April 18 and April 25 at Price Elementary School, 4351 S. Drexel Blvd.

"Every year we are able to help more and more girls look their best on their special day, as well as do something beneficial for the environment," GSP founder Dorian Carter said. "Everyone should have the chance to find the dress of their dreams, and we are pleased to continue to be able to offer this opportunity at no cost."

Dresses will be accepted at the following drop-off locations through April 11: any USAgain bin; Smitten Boutique, 1047 W. Madison St.; area Zengeler Cleaners locations; and at the offices of Ald. Chicago’s upscale areas posted higher home and condo prices in 2014

Still large numbers of owners underwater

BY DON DeBAT

Luxury single-family homes and condominiums were in high demand and sold for top dollar in 2014 in Chicago’s most upscale neighborhoods—the Gold Coast/Near North Side, Lincoln Park and Lakeview, reports a new analysis.

“Chicago saw rising prices, the rebirth of new construction and a shortage of housing inventory in key North Side neighborhoods,” noted veteran broker Louise Study of Baird & Warner. “With home prices on the rise, now may be the time to sell and move upward or onward, to ride the rising tide to greater equity.”

Since 1984, Study has published the annual Study Study of Residential Real Estate compiled from Multiple Listing Service statistics on sales of $500,000-plus residential units in 10 target neighborhoods.

Chicago’s three top upscale neighborhoods all posted price gains in 2014, said Study, noting that her 30th annual survey reported the following prices and transaction numbers:

- Gold Coast/Near North. Thirty luxury single-family homes and 400 upscale condominiums, co-operative apartments and townhomes were sold in the Gold Coast/Near North area in 2014.
- The median luxury home price last year was $3.07 million on the Gold Coast/Near North, compared with $1.62 million in 2013. The median price for upscale condos, co-ops and townhomes rose to $899,000, compared with $600,000 in 2013.

- Lincoln Park. Seventy-seven luxury single-family homes were sold at a median price of $2,532,500 in 2014. Some 134 upscale condo sales were posted at a median price of $725,000.
- A year earlier, the median luxury home price in Lincoln Park was $1.35 million, while median upscale condo prices were $635,000.
- Lakeview. Forty-seven luxury single-family homes were sold in Lakeview at a median price of $1.85 million in 2014. The median home price was $1,124,500 in Lakeview in 2013.
- Some 104 upscale condos, co-ops or townhomes sold in Lakeview at a median price of $649,250. The median luxury condo price was $596,000 a year earlier.
- The Study Study reported the following 2014 prices and transactions in luxury single-family home and upscale condo, co-op and townhome sales in other North Side city neighborhoods:
- South Loop. Nine luxury homes were sold in 2014 with a median price of $980,000. Some 197 upscale condo, co-op and townhome sales were posted in 2014 with a median price of $812,500.
- West Loop. Seven luxury homes were sold in 2014 with a median price of $1.2 million. The median sale price was $658,569 on 174 upscale condo, co-op or townhome transactions in 2014.

The Home Front

- Bucktown-Wicker Park. The median luxury home price was $806,250 on 320 transactions in 2014. Some 349 upscale condo, co-op and townhome sales were recorded in 2014 with a median price of $567,500.
- Roscoe Village. The median luxury home sale price was $960,000 on 180 sales transactions in 2014. Fifty-two upscale condo, co-op and townhome sales were recorded in 2014 with a median price of $560,000.
- Andersonville. Forty-eight luxury home transactions were recorded in 2014 with a median price of $662,500 in the Andersonville and Lakewood Balmoral neighborhoods. Thirteen upscale condo, co-op or townhome sales were recorded at a median price of $550,000.

- Ravenswood-Lincoln Square. Some 113 luxury home transactions were posted in 2014 with a median price of $727,500 in Ravenswood, Ravenswood Manor, Ravenswood Gardens and Lincoln Square. A total of 33 upscale condo, co-op and townhomes in these hot areas sold for a median price of $534,000.

So home values of high end properties are rising in nicer parts of town, but many homeowners are still slipping underwater in Chicago and other U.S. cities.

According to a study released by Zillow Group last Friday, in 21 of the 50 biggest U.S. housing markets, the number of borrowers who owe more on their homes than the homes are worth increased during the fourth quarter of 2014.

In Chicago that can range from 22% in Lincoln Park, to 33% in Uptown, 29% in Edgewater, 26% in Lincoln Square, 31% in the Gold Coast, 24% in Roscoe Village, and 43% in East Rogers Park. Nationwide about 16.9% of all mortgaged homes were underwater in the fourth quarter. Zillow estimates that the normal share of underwater borrowers is thought to be around five percent. So negative equity persists in many parts of the North Side even as home values continue to recover from the housing bust. The problem is that while average home prices are rising as noted above, the low end of the market in many areas are seeing stagnant value growth or even falls in some cases. Those properties hardest hit in the bust are now the slowest to recover.

Local real-estate agents who specialize in short sales say that they have seen the number of clients with underwater homes drop off but not disappear even as prices have rebounded.

Development proposal for Hubbard and Wells streets

Ald. Brendan Reilly [42nd] and the River North Residents Assoc. are hosting a community presentation 6 p.m. Tuesday, March 31, at Paris Club, 59 W Hubbard St., for a proposed development on the southwest corner of Hubbard and Wells streets.

Representatives of the Centrum Partners will present their plans and answer questions about their proposed new development consisting of an eight-story office building and 22-story residential building containing 193 residential units. Both buildings will have ground floor commercial space. 91 parking spaces located in the residential building will serve both buildings.

This is no way to buy a condo.

Combating winter's wrath isn't a pipe dream for Blanton Plumbing

Until recently, not many people knew what an Arctic Vortex was

STORY AND PHOTOS
BY BOB KITSOS

American playwright Eugene O'Neil's "The Iceman Cometh" premiered on Broadway in 1946. Many homeowners can relate to the play's title and the "iceman's" unwelcome visits this last winter.

With this week's cold and snow returning others may be having shudders, remembering recently frozen pipes.

Frozen pipes kept plumbing companies, such as Blanton Plumbing, 5126 N. Ravenswood, busy 24/7 on many of the calendar's coldest days. "I've been in business for 33 years and have seen more damage in the last two years than in the previous 31," said Jack Blanton, owner of Blanton Plumbing.

From the 2014 Arctic Vortex to what ever made this last winter cold, many more North Siders have felt the pain on their faces and wallets these last two winters.

Blanton offered some suggestions to prevent frozen pipes. He recommended allowing the faucet to drip slightly, which alleviates pressure in the system. Once a pipe freezes, it creates pressure between the blockage and the faucet that will cause the pipe to burst. So a few bucks in higher water bills can save hundred or even thousands of dollars in emergency plumbing work.

Jack Blanton, owner of the company that has been in business since 1982, said he likes the hands-on approach to get the job done.

Pipes often are located inside cabinets. When the temperatures drop, it's a good idea to keep these cabinet doors open so that the heat from the rest of the house can keep the pipes warm as well. You should also keep all interior doors open so that heat can flow more evenly throughout the home.

With warmer weather coming home owners should think about insulation needs in the attic, crawl space or other out-of-the-way places, and installing insulation over poorly-protected pipes. This is one scenario where neatness doesn't count, just get the insulation where it needs to go as odds are next winter will be brutal again.

If you have chronic problems think about installing a heating cable to keep a cold pipe from freezing. Follow the manufacturer's instructions on the packaging. Some heat tapes are wrapped around the pipe, others simply run along it. If you can't find heat trace cable at your local home center, try an electrical supply house. Sometimes this cable is cut to length from a roll, in which case you may have to buy a kit (or separate parts) to convert into a working heat trace cable. In other cases, the cable is sold ready to use, with one end safely terminated and insulated and the other end with an electrical plug.

Blanton said, "About 50% of the time, pipes can be thawed without breaks, especially if the problem is addressed before the ice expands too much."

In the worst case, if you know a problem is coming then turn off the main water valve while you sleep. If a pipe freezes and breaks, the spillage is limited only to the water in the pipe.

Repairing a frozen pipe requires a professional. "Depending on the material, you cut the affected area out and then reconnect it, usually with new copper pipes," Blanton explained. "The copper then gets applied either by soldering, or by a press machine. This is done by use of specialized fittings and a machine then presses the pipe together."

Blanton's new 8,000 square-foot location provides more space for the company's 11 trucks and equipment.

Plumbing has been in the Blanton family for three generations. "Quality is the reason we're still in business," Blanton said. "Our approach with every customer is to rectify your problem now."

While the company, winner of six Angie's List awards in 2014, will do commercial work, approximately 85% of the service calls are for residential problems. Serving the greater Chicagoland area and northern suburbs, the licensed, insured and bonded company provides 24-hour emergency service and charges a flat fee for repairs, not an hourly rate. The average price of a service call is about $500, Blanton said.

The company moved to its new location at 5126 N. Ravenswood in early February and the phones were ringing off the hook for most of this winter. On a recent Saturday, Blanton received 29 service calls.

"I've been in business for 33 years and have seen more damage in the last two years than in the previous 31," said Jack Blanton.

Blanton discovered his new location by chance when driving by the former photography studio. The new 8,000 square-foot location now provides adequate room for the company's 11 trucks, 20 employees and most of their equipment. Limited parking and storage space plagued the company at their previous location in the 4500 block of N. Ravenswood.

Marie Antoinette-inspired free fashion show at Steppenwolf

Show and contest to feature Chicago Designers, French cuisine and pop music

In celebration of one of civilization's most famous fashionistas, Steppenwolf Theatre Co. hosts EXPLORE: The World of Marie Antoinette, an exclusive free fashion show and party 5:30 p.m. Thursday, April 9. Emerging Chicago fashion designers Elena Bobysheva, Sandra Leonard, Satoko Mizuno, Kate Pankoke and Kat Anderson have submitted their high fashion creations, inspired by the over-the-top pageantry seen in Steppenwolf's current hit production of Marie Antoinette, to be critiqued by a panel of local fashion experts.

The fashion show will be hosted by local diva Carolyn Hoerdemann and feature a special presentation by international performance artist Joseph Ravens.

Guests will also taste authentic cuisine from the French kitchens of Chicago's own Chez Moi and DJ Maxime Bonnard spinning house and French pop tunes. David Adjmi's Marie Antoinette runs through May 10, in the Downstairs Theatre.

The event will take place in Steppenwolf's rehearsal hall, 758 W North Ave. EXPLORE events are free, but space is limited. This interested can RSVP by calling 312-335-1650.

EXPLORE events invite audiences to celebrate the ideas and themes of the play through a fun, social setting. Each EXPLORE event is tailored to create an immersive environment that reflects the world of that play.

Before Britney Spears and Justin Bieber, there was Marie Antoinette. In David Adjmi's contemporary take on the young queen of France, Marie is a confection created by a society that values extravagance and artifice. But France's love affair with the royals sours as revolution brews, and for Marie, the political suddenly becomes very personal. From the light and breezy banter at the palace to the surging chants of "Liberté! Égalité! Fraternité!" in the streets, Marie Antoinette holds a mirror up to our contemporary society that might just be entertaining itself to death.

Like birth and death, hacking became a new form of the inevitable in the last couple years. Of course, it had bubbled to the surface time and again, stewing in and out of personal computers, government databases and the sci-fi imagination.

During the last 12 months however, hacking broke through to the banner headlines and shows little sign of relinquishing the threatening power it wields in every field from engineering to electronic eavesdropping to entertainment. People seem familiar with the concept of this dark art. But most of us lack the technical background to challenge the netherworld that hackers invade and conquer. That needs to change.

The cyber security community is emphatic in insisting that government officials, CFOs, high school students and everyone else need to get proactive about a problem that is quickly spiraling out of control. Without the proper information — and a willingness to cut through the techie jargon that often clouds any conversation about hacking — we all add to our risk.

The crowd of sharply dressed business leaders and innovators shuffled out of the lake-effect cold and into the posh and purple-lit Venue SIX10 on S. Michigan Ave. in downtown Chicago. The sense of urgency surrounding this year's Bloomberg Government technology panel, entitled "Digital Trust," was palpable. What would it take to prevent the "next Sony"?

If the diverse panel had one message, it was that the 99% of law-abiding Internet users need to take ownership of protecting themselves. Any other scenario — that the hackers will quit, or that the government will step up its game — is wishful thinking, they say.

"I think with government specifically the challenge we have is just jurisdictions," said Roger Liew, senior vice president and chief technology officer at Orbitz Worldwide. "If our computers in the Chicagoland area are hacked by somebody not in the city of Chicago, which is very likely, then we can't call the police."

The panel talked through a number of potential fixes for both big companies and individual Internet users, including better and more consistent encryption. But the buzziest strategy, and one that has been floating around in cyber security circles for years, is two-factor authentication. That basically means relying on two identifying components rather than one. Anyone who has swiped a credit card and then entered a PIN number to verify that it is really you on the other end of that transaction is familiar with the procedure, and it could be making its way online soon. Possibilities include the use of USB stick tokens, transaction authentication numbers, and even fingerprint and iris scans.

Another tool for the good guys is the much heralded "smart card" or "chip card," a bank card with integrated circuits. Unlike the magnetic strip cards widely used today, smart cards store funds on the cards themselves, making them considerably harder to exploit. Additionally, chip circuits carrying encrypted data are extremely difficult to replicate, acting as an additional deterrent against fraud.

This tech world arms race is a necessary response to a growing threat. While there are literally thousands of ways for hackers to compromise a given computer system, most targets are still readily susceptible to the most basic weapons in a hacker's arsenal.

"Most breaches occur because the hackers were able to brute force a password or because something was easily guessed," said Ken Westin, a security researcher based in Portland, OR.

In computer parlance, "brute forcing" refers to an infiltration method in which hackers use specially written programs that try millions of potential passwords to unlock private online accounts. It's the equivalent of unlocking a safe by trying every possible combination, albeit much, much faster.

Disturbingly, many hackers are able to avoid brute forcing altogether by making educated guesses about their target's passwords. Christopher Chaney, who in 2011 gained notoriety and a 10-year jail sentence for breaking into celebrity email accounts, admitted to police that cursory research often revealed everything he needed to guess the passwords of stars like Mila Kunis and Scarlett Johansson.

Similar vulnerabilities may have allowed hackers to target Apple iCloud accounts of A-listers like Jennifer Lawrence, Kate Upton, Kaley Cuoco, and Ariana Grande during a massive photo leak in Sept., 2014. The names of pets, kids, and hometowns become frequent and predictable passwords to aid the hacker.

Somewhat more sophisticated are the hacks that allowed criminals to break into the networks of retailers like Home Depot and Target. These attacks often involve point-of-service (PoS) tampering, in which those wishing to compromise a network will infect available devices like company computers or automated registers with malware that gather sensitive data like account numbers from debit and credit cards.

Also in this league are Structured Query Language attacks — also known as SQL injection attacks — which use malicious code to corrupt and exploit vulnerable software, including the programs that run magnetic stripe readers and ATMs. SQL injection was the preferred hacking technique of Albert Gonzales, an American criminal whose credit card theft ring amassed over 170 million stolen numbers by targeting companies like TJ Maxx and 7-Eleven.

For all the emotional hurt and financial damage these cyber attacks inflict, it is doubtful that any of them were as sophisticated, or as destructive, as December's Sony Pictures hack. The attack did not just compromise data, it destroyed data by installing a malicious storage erasing program known as Wiper. The hack hampered the release of The Interview, ignited an impassioned national debate about free speech, and cost the multinational corporation billions of dollars and considerable prestige in the cloistered world of Hollywood.

"The term 'systemic failure' is not out of place [to describe the Sony hack]," said Stephen Cobb, a senior security researcher at technology firm ESET, during a web seminar in January.

According to Cobb, sections of Sony's network fell outside of the company's security capabilities. Once hackers were able to compromise the weakest areas of Sony's security, they wormed their way to the most sensitive data, including the now infamous personal correspondence of executives Amy Pascal and Scott Rudin.

The Sony hack has inspired a security gut check in the world of American business. Compromised data is bad enough. Even worse is being left with no legal recourse or compensation when the responsible parties vanish into the cyber ether. Law enforcement agencies like the FBI can almost always check website user logs to determine the Internet Protocol (IP) address of computers connected to a victim network, but most hackers have ways of disguising their IPs through anonymous routing services like Tor. If a given IP is found to be a mask, the trail can go cold.

"It's very easy to make it look like North Korea hacked Sony," said Westin. "It's very difficult to place a person behind the computer."

The Sony hack could very well inspire a corporate security race-to-the-top now that the American business community fully realizes what is at stake.

Despite our best precautions, the Internet is a difficult world for asserting the rule of law. In some ways, it resembles a digital Old West, where even the good guys resist control. As powerful and resourceful as law enforcement and the business community might be, they will often encounter highly motivated cadres of criminals and net delinquents who know the lay of the land better than they do and whose motives are difficult to rationalize.

Take, for instance, the Lizard Squad, a hacker collective known for temporarily bringing down PlayStation and Xbox by overwhelming them with traffic, a tactic known as a distributed denial-of-service (DDoS) attack. Unlike the Guardians of Peace (who claimed responsibility for the Sony hack) and Anonymous (who are known for their leftist rhetoric), Lizard Squad has no politics, espouses no agenda, defends no state, and collects no money. When Lizard Squad attacked PlayStation on Christmas Day, the motives that surrounded the Sony case were strangely missing.

"The DDoS Lizard Squad attack reminds us of something we in security tend to get wrong," said Cobb. "A lot of what they are doing is because of the fun of it."

Hacking: How to fight back and protect yourself

99% of law-abiding Internet users need to take ownership of protecting themselves. Any other scenario - that the hackers will quit, or that the government will step up its game - is wishful thinking, they say.

Urban Street Window Works' Scott Baermann wants to be advocates for businesses based out of cargo bikes.

Window washers on two wheels do the dirty work

BY MEREDITH WILSON
Medill News Service

Soon after launching their window washing business, Urban Street Window Works' Scott Baermann and his partner Ryan Hoban couldn't find a place to park their van to do a job, particularly on Chicago's North Side.

"Man, we should really do this on bikes," Scott said to Ryan, fearing that parking ticket fines could wipe out hard earned profits.

The pair of cargo bikes they purchased a few days later became their trademark, and the resulting low-overheard, high-profile strategy helps the tiny firm stand out in the market.

The two have higher aspirations than just creating a bike-based business washing windows, removing acid etching and graffiti, and installing anti-acid window film. They want to help advance the community of bike-based businesses based out of cargo bikes in Chicago.

"Buying the bikes was our marketing," Hoban said. "We thought we could position ourselves in the market, be a little sexier than the homeless guys you see washing windows."

According to Hoban, people were drawn in by the spectacle of guys washing storefront windows from their bicycles.

"We spent a lot of times on jobs just talking to people," Hoban said.

They would hand out business cards, and after six months, they had gone from eight clients to 30.

Tim Taylor, the owner of Bucktown-based coffeeshop Ipsento, and Urban Street Window Works' first client, appreciates their branding and enjoys being associated with their business.

"I mean, who else is driving those bikes around washing windows? They brought some coolness factor," Taylor said.

Taylor appreciates their reliability and their relationship beyond the job. He thinks of their businesses as mutually supportive.

"It really is the season of craft. Craft coffee, craft cheeses, craft grains, craft wine... why not craft window washing?" Taylor asked.

Baermann has been cleaning windows for 10 years. He began with a franchise of Window King in Indiana, and when the parent company dissolved, he opted to continue, renaming his business Baermann Window Cleaning.

When he brought Hoban on in 2011, both men had young families and were living in Chicago, commuting to Indiana every day to clean windows.

"I said to Scott, 'Why are we driving all the way to Indiana when there's a lot of glass in the city we live in?'" Hoban said.

They launched Urban Street Window Works – a name Hoban came up with while he and Baermann were walking to a bar – in August of 2012.

The two have higher aspirations than just creating a bike-based business washing windows, removing acid etching and graffiti, and installing anti-acid window film. They want to help advance the community of bike-based businesses based out of cargo bikes in Chicago.

"Chicago is a perfect city for this. They're building so many new bike lanes," said Baermann. "America's late in finding the newest trends in the world. This is going to happen eventually here, so we want to be leaders in that. We want to be advocates for cargo bikes in the city."

It didn't take long for other people to get interested in their business. A month after they launched, Phil Tadros, entrepreneur and CEO of Chicago-based marketing company Doejo, offered to partner with them.

"He's a quick mover, that's what he does, he starts businesses. He was like 'do you guys need money? What do you guys need?'" It was very flattering," Baermann said.

Hoban and Baermann weren't ready to share ownership of their business, so they turned Tadros down.

Jeff Sharfstein, an angel investor, approached them soon after with an offer of nearly $1 million to add 100 bikes to Urban Street.

"Both Ryan and I felt totally out of our league, to be honest," Baermann said. "He was talking about franchising and we knew we had a lot ahead of us in our city, and we wanted to take it one day at a time."

Talks slowed down, and Sharfstein became concerned about whether the revenue could support the kind of investment he was looking to make.

"We didn't really know what we were doing. I think we pushed for some things we shouldn't have," Baermann said.

Baermann is open to the idea of investors, but isn't currently talking to anyone.

"I don't feel like I really want to give equity away. I'd have to have a good relationship with someone. It has to feel right, I have to have a good gut feeling about someone," he said.

In 2013, their first full year in business, Urban Street made $55,000 in revenue. It was good money, but "not enough for both of us to support families." One of them had to go, Hoban said.

When the pair disagreed over whether to partner with Mark Rashkow, who wanted to bring Urban Street into his power washing business, Hoban decided to depart and join Rashkow at Pane Bros. (Hoban left Pane Bros. nine months later.)

Now, Baermann is focused on expanding the residential window-washing and graffiti-removal aspects of his business, which he estimates make up 40% of his revenue.

He is also moving into more traditional marketing, using the Internet and mobile apps to target new customers. However, Baermann doesn't like marketing, and has never thought of himself as a salesman.

"I'm not like a planner, we didn't have a business plan. We still really don't. I'm just about building a good business that serves people well. I think of the golden rule, treat people how they want to be treated, and it seems to work."

In 2014, Urban Street Window Works brought in $94,000 in revenue and grew its storefront client base to 80. Baermann has hired a full-time employee to focus on growing residential business, a part-timer to focus on storefronts and a "very part-time stay-at-home mom" to answer the phone [312-715-7077].

Going into his third year with Urban Street Window Works, the "make or break year," according to Baermann, he is optimistic about his prospects.

"I just know we are going to grow like crazy this year," he said.

gle family home she has valued through persistent property tax appeals as an old three-flat,” Ald. Smith said.

“If there’s something we’re doing illegal, it will be corrected,” Vickrey assured last week’s forum. “This was not something we changed. I’m assuming it was simply a continuation of what was there before.”

With no apology coming from Ald. Smith, Vickrey again lashed out at Smith for breaking the promise she said Ald. Smith made to be a full-time alderman when she was first elected four years ago.

Ald. Smith said she had never made a secret of her lucrative consultant’s job with a non-profit suburban arts foundation funded by her most ardent supporters. “It only takes a small amount of my day. One of my political mentors, Marty Oberman, was a practicing lawyer (while serving as alderman), yet nobody ever said he wasn’t a full-time alderman. [Oberman himself could not stand for re-election in 1987 after he voted for large property tax increase over the objections of the majority of the 43rd Ward. Oberman was also responsible for downzoning much of east Lincoln Park, driving up property values and fostering the exodus of poor and minorities families out of Lincoln Park leaving it one of the least diverse communities in the city. He remains today one of the most divisive political figures in Lincoln Park history.]

The alderman then suggested Vickrey apologize.

“Certain wards are OK with aldermen who work side jobs, but not here,” responded Vickrey. “Usually when we support the arts, the money flows the other way.”

Turning to campaign finances, Vickrey accused Ald. Smith of taking a $57,000 contribution from General Iron, one of the plants near the now vacated Finkl Steel mill centered at Cortland, Clybourn and the river.

“I don’t accept contributions from developers with interests in our ward and that’s always been my policy. General Iron is not part of the development site (that opened up when Finkl Steel moved to the South Side). And they’re not part of Finkl Steel. It’s a completely different business.”

At the moment, the ward – and the city – face far more serious problems, Ald. Smith said. “The Chicago Public Schools’ budget is in a horrible mess. And for one reason. The pension crisis. It won’t matter what else we do. We have to fix the problem. Unless we do, we’ll bankrupt the whole system.”

While it didn’t seem like a big deal when it started, “three-percent cost of living increases every year for a person who retires at 60 and lives to be 90 means the pension will more than double during that time,” Ald. Smith said.

“If something isn’t done soon, this city will sink,” she warned.

Asked how they’d balance serving the Gold Coast with the rest of what has become an even more complex 43rd Ward, Ald. Smith said she was doing that even before she inherited the Gold Coast when the ward boundaries were redrawn last year.

“I’ve worked very closely with this area all along. And I go to as many of your condo meetings as I can. I’ve enjoyed working for you and hope to continue doing so,” she added.

Vickrey’s answer was even more succinct.

“Respectfully and well.”

Sound of science: DePaul phonographers tune in to city noise

BY BRYCE GRAY
Medill News Service

With car horns, truck traffic, and the buzz of jackhammers and construction blaring through every city neighborhood, local decibel levels make Chicago one of the noisiest places in the country.

That's according to data released recently by the National Park Service's Division of Natural Sounds and Night Skies.

Amid the din, Chicago Wildsounds – an organization of phonographers launched by DePaul Univ. students – has spent the last year and a half studying the area's natural sounds through localized projects devoted to the emerging field of soundscape ecology.

Birds breaking out in song at the bird sanctuary at Montrose Point are a sure clue to soil rich with earthworms, for instance. And crickets change the frequency of their chirps to compete with traffic noise on Lake Shore Dr. Roni Jachowski, a senior environmental studies major and a co-founder of Chicago Wildsounds members check equipment monitoring natural and urban sounds.

worms present – a possible indicator of good soil health – there were also more bird calls. Audio recordings also indicated that fewer birds correlate with higher levels of ammonia in the soil and the sound of the natural world – known as biophony to sound ecologists. Plenty of human-produced sounds – or anthrophony – are picked up along with the natural hum of the wind or thunderstorms, characterized as geophony.

Jachowski said that she has been unable to find any location in the Chicago area where the surrounding anthrophony is completely stifled.

"The reason is because of Midway and O'Hare," said Jachowski. "We have a lot of air noise pollution. That's what we call a sonic signature and that is Chicago's sonic signature. It will include airplanes – it just will."

The students involved with Chicago Wildsounds still have yet to fully analyze their recordings. But other sound ecology researchers have drawn surprising conclusions about the influence of human noise on the natural world.

"There are studies that have shown that crickets are starting to communicate in a different frequency range – in a higher frequency range," said Jachowski. "And they believe that's because traffic occupies a low frequency and so crickets are having to operate on a different frequency."

Bird species, too, have had to alter their vocalizations in order to be heard. For instance, "we know that American robins are communicating louder because of a lot of the anthrophonies – the human-made noises," said Jachowski, noting that researchers are investigating how noisier environments are impacting reproduction in various species by drowning out mat-

Crickets change the frequency of their chirps to compete with traffic noise on Lake Shore Drive.

Chicago Wildsounds, says a key goal of the group's research is "to see if we can make predictions about the health of an ecosystem based on what we hear."

In the fall, the group put that notion to the test by conducting traditional ecological assessments of soil quality and seeing whether their findings corresponded with sounds above ground.

"We were able to come up with some interesting results," Jachowski said.

The group found that in areas with greater quantities of earth-sparser populations of worms.

Another of the group's main research projects monitors the urban soundscape on a north-south gradient stretching along the lakeshore, from McDonald Woods near the Chicago Botanic Garden in Glencoe to Burnham Wildlife Corridor on the South Side. Jachowski said that the long-term lakefront sound collection is ongoing and findings have yet to be analyzed.

Recordings captured in such an intensely urbanized environment obviously reveal more than simply

Gang shooting Sunday in Lincoln Square

A gang related shooting took place near Winnemac Park 6:30 p.m. Sunday resulting in the death of a 21-year-old man.

The shooting took place on the 2200 block of W. Winnemac Ave. and involved approximately five male Hispanics. The man that was killed resided on N. Kenmore Ave. and was a member of the P-Stone Nation street gang, according to police. He was taken in Critical Condition to Advocate Illinois Masonic Hospital where he was pronounced dead.

Witnesses saw a red SUV fleeing from the scene say police. Witnesses say that the deceased had been arguing with people in the SUV before he suffered a single gunshot wound fired from a close range. No one has been taken into custody yet.

Rogers Park man arrested on gun charges

A Rogers Park man was arrested March 18 on felony weapons charges after officers recovered a Sturm, Ruger and Co. 9mm handgun and 33 rounds of ammunition from his trunk.

Quentin J. Sykes, 31, of the 1700 block of W. Pratt Blvd., did not have a FOID card or a license to conceal-and-carry. In addition, the handgun had not been registered with the state, police said.

Sykes was charged with additional misdemeanors for a small amount of synthetic marijuana and a vaporizer pen found in his possession and for failing to carry a driver's license.

Sykes had been stopped in the 6800 block of N. Clark St. around midnight for driving with expired license-plate tags. When an officer asked about the marijuana smell in the vehicle, Sykes reportedly admitted he had been smoking "wax" from the vaporizer and told officers there was a handgun in the trunk.

Three ammunition magazines were found alongside the weapon, police said.

Two clips had 15-round capacities and one was loaded with nine shots, according to officers. The third magazine was not loaded but had space for 30-rounds.Two different types of bullet were recovered, made up of 17 hollow-point rounds and 16 standard shots.

During his arrest Sykes denied having any gang affiliations.

Chicago Revenue Inspector given probation for extortion

A former Revenue Inspector for the City of Chicago's Dept. of Business Affairs and Consumer Protection was sentenced Thursday to 12 months' probation as a result of his conviction of extortion under color of official right.

Elias Garzo, 55, pled guilty in February 2011 to a one-count information, admitting that while employed as a Revenue Inspector in 2009, he received money from a confidential source and an individual who controlled stores in Chicago that sold cigarettes. Garza would, in return, provide advanced notification of upcoming City inspections of those stores that were designed to ensure proper payment of taxes on cigarettes.

Garza admitted that in May 2009, he accepted $500 from the confidential source in return for providing information about upcoming store inspections, and that in September 2009, Garza accepted another $300 in return for his promise to alert them of upcoming inspections.

Off duty taxi driver fights thief for gun and wins

An off-duty taxi driver was thumped across the head with the butt-end of a revolver and then fought with the thief for the weapon during a March 17 robbery attempt in Rogers Park.

The driver, 48, recovered the gun as the thief ran from the fight on the 2000 block of W. Birchwood Ave. and presented it to officers who'd responded to the robbery call.

Officers identified the gun as .38 caliber with a four inch barrel and said the gun had in fact not been loaded during the fight. But the driver had not known that when he began fighting the thief for the gun, according to police.

The driver was sent to Presence St. Francis Hospital in Evanston with a minor head injury and was released later that morning, according to the hospital.

The thief had approached the driver around 2 a.m. in the alley near his garage, police said. He had asked for the time and when the driver looked to his watch the thief pulled the gun and ordered the man to hand over all his money.

After being told by the driver that he wasn't carrying any cash, the thief nailed him across the head with the gun and began searching his pockets. The driver said that when he noticed the gunman wasn't paying attention to him, he grabbed the weapon and began to fight for it.

The scrum toppled both men down to the hard alleyway where the gun broke free, according to the driver. He had grabbed the weapon as the thief ran north towards Howard St. and escaped. The driver went home with the weapon and called 911.

Couple arrested for package thefts off porches

A career burglar's parole has been revoked and he's back in Stat-evil after allegedly stealing packages from Lakeview porches earlier this month.

Samuel Maldonado, 52, returned to Stat-evil Friday afternoon to serve out the balance of a 10 year burglary sentence that he received in 2009.

His alleged accomplice, Marie Tirado, 48, is charged with two counts of theft. Her bail's set at $75,000.

Police searched for the couple after neighbors reported seeing Maldonado taking packages from porches and placing them in a Toyota allegedly driven by Tirado. Police say the duo's car contained several packages in the back seat and trunk—none was addressed to either Maldonado or Tirado.

Among the items inventoried by police were: U.S. mail addressed to a woman in the 3700 block of Wayne; a box delivered to a resident of the 3000 block of Sheffield; Moen bathroom fixtures; individually-wrapped shirts; blankets; a Britax car seat travel bag; a collection of children's books; and stuffed animals.

Drive by shooting in Rogers Park sends Gangster Disciple to hospital

A 27-year-old was hit twice during a drive-by shooting the night of March 13 in Rogers Park and taken to Presence St. Francis Hospital in Evanston for emergency surgery.

The victim—who was hit in the left arm and upper-left abdomen while walking in the 1600 block of W. Juneway Terrace—was a known Gangster Disciple who lived on the block, according to police. There was no word on his condition at the time of publication.

A stray bullet from the burst of shots had smashed through a window to a first-floor apartment on Juneway Terrace where a young boy was playing video games, the boy's father told officers at the scene. No one was injured by the stray bullet but police said the apartment was damaged.

Officers recovered nine empty casings on the street next to a vehicle that had been damaged by several errant shots The owner of that vehicle was not inside when the shots were fired and was not involved in the incident. Two witnesses saw a vehicle they believed the shots had come from fleeing the area but lost sight of it in traffic near N. Sheridan Rd., according to police.

7-Eleven stores robbed in Uptown, Lakeview

Chicago police are looking for suspects in three recent store robberies. In each of these incidents, two offenders used force and the threat of force by displaying a handgun while robbing the store and customers inside. All three incident occurred at 7-Eleven stores, one at 3:30 a.m. March 11 on the 3700 block of N. Broadway, and the other two occurred at the same store on the 4100 block of N. Clark St. One at 3:30 a.m March 20, and the other at 8:15 a.m. March 22. During the March 22 robbery the offenders also robbed a customer who was shopping inside the store.

From the Broadway incident, the two offenders are described as male blacks, both wearing black jackets with hoods and black face masks, armed with a chrome handgun. One was described as being 5'- 9" and the other was 6' tall.

From the Clark St. incidents, two offenders described as male blacks, 20 - 30 years old, from 5' - 9" to 6' tall, 150-170 lbs. One was wearing a white jacket with red designs during both robberies. The other offender wore dark colored jackets. Both had scarves over their faces and were armed with a chrome handgun. No one has been taken into custody yet.

Police are asking anyone with information on any of these crimes to call Area North Detectives at 312-744-8263 and refer to Pattern #P15-N-078 (BA).

Minor traffic accident leads to major fight on Morse Ave.

A man involved in a traffic traffic accident on Morse Ave. was arrested March 16 after the victim and multiple witnesses said he attempted to run over the man whose vehicle he'd hit.

Police said the 48-year-old man charged with aggravated battery returned several times to the 1200 block of Morse and continued ramming the victim's vehicle. The victim, whose car was being steadily demolished, punched and kicked his antagonist's vehicle during the fracas, denting it and knocking out the driver's side window, according to police.

The victim eventually broke the man's windshield by hurling an object at it when he retuned for a third time and attempted to run him over, police said. Based on a video of the incident, police said the man responsible for the destruction had multiple opportunities to leave the street but had reversed his vehicle into the other car and even made a u-turn to continue the fight.

The confrontation was sparked by a minor accident around 3:30 p.m. Witnesses told officers the man responsible for the crash refused to get out of his vehicle or respond to the man whose vehicle he'd damaged. When the victim pounded on the man's window and yelled for him to get out, he threw his vehicle in reverse and slammed into the victim's vehicle a second time, police said. Officers arrived to catch the end of the confrontation and make the arrest.

Mechanic threatened by world's worst customer

A mechanic at Touhy and Western Service Station was menaced with a handgun March 16 after a violent confrontation with a potential customer in the parking lot.

Toward the end of a fight that went from words being exchanged to a shoving match, the customer returned with a handgun tucked into his belt and told a passenger in his vehicle to open the trunk because he was "about to kill a mother-f—er," police said.

The customer had gone to the station at 7130 N. Western Ave. around 3 a.m. and stated that he needed a break light replaced, according to police. When the mechanic said the fee was $15 the customer was incensed and refused to pay. But instead of leaving, he found a rock in the parking lot and threw it at the mechanic, police said.

The confrontation escalated, with the mechanic saying he wasn't going to do the work at any price, and the customer refusing to leave the area despite threats that the police were going to be called. The customer had shoved the mechanic when he picked up a phone to call 911, which started a back and forth shoving match, police said.

Afterwards, the mechanic went to the garage and returned wielding a hammer which got the customer to abandon the lot momentarily. But he returned several minutes later with the handgun tucked into his waistband and showed it to the mechanic with the threat to kill him, police said. He fled again when the mechanic picked up the phone to call 911. Officers toured the area but did not make any arrests.

The gunman was described as a black male in his early 30s, approximately 6' tall and 170 lbs. He wore a black leather coat over a black shirt and gray jeans, according to the mechanic. He was driving a maroon-colored Buick or Pontiac, police said.

Man wanted for Attempted Kidnapping, Luring Youth on Elm St.

A 12 year old female juvenile victim was walking on the 500 block of W. Elm St. 8:25 a.m. March 17 when a man approached the victim in a smaller white four-door sedan with the intention of luring her into his vehicle. The victim managed to run to safety, alerted school security and escaped harm say police.

The offender was described as a black male, approximately 30-35 years of age, with short black hair, clean shaven, wearing a dark hoody. Police say that the offender may have a scratch on his face and is dark complected.

Police are asking anyone with information on this incident to call the Central Detective Division at 312-747-8380 and refer to case RD#HY187702.

Neighbors who would like to establish a Parent Patrol or Walking School Bus Program at a school should call the CAPS Implementation Office at 312-747-9987 for more information on this and other safety programs.

The couple that rob together serve time together

Danny Sanchez,19, and Nancy Del Valle, 20, have been charged with armed robbery after allegedly brandishing a hammer to rob a CTA passenger Sunday, march 15.

Court records show the two have a history of being arrested together for, among other things, tagging buildings in Chicago and stealing bottles of Hennessey cognac.

Bail for Sanchez and Del Valle is set at $250,000 and $150,000 respectively. Both list Uptown addresses in the 800 block of Wilson.

Man finds his taxes have been done for him, but not in a good way

An agent from H&R Block sent a 57-year-old Rogers Park man to police after an IRS tax-return form was filed without his consent.

The man, who lives on the 7400 block of N. Claremont Ave, told officers on March 13 that H&R Block had called to say the tax forms he'd filed were being rejected because his taxes had already been filed and a refund was determined. The amount of the expected refund was not specified.

The IRS has warned in recent months about phone scams targeting people to pay bogus tax debts using cash cards over the phone. Identity theft tax filing are another danger, according to the agency, and any fraud or false filings should be reported to police immediately.

Police arrest two gang members on Ridge for multiple violations

Rogers Park police arrested two admitted gang members March 15 for multiple offenses after stopping their vehicle for failing to signal on the 6300 block of Ridge Blvd.

The driver, 22, was carrying a high-powered stungun in the vehicle, police said. He was charged with a misdemeanor for unlawful use of a dangerous weapon.

In addition, officers found that his driver's license was suspended and that he was in violation of a bail bond from a February arrest for possession of cocaine.

The passenger, 19, was wearing an electronic parole bracelet and was charged with violation of his legal curfew. He told officers, who had stopped the vehicle around 11:30 p.m., that he was allowed to be out until 1 a.m. His probation officer told police his curfew was 7 p.m. when they contacted her, according to the report.

Both men are known members of the Insane Cutthroat Gangster faction of the Gangster Disciples, a group wanted for or suspected in multiple shootings and murders in Rogers Park over the last five years.

Police arrest flasher

A father and his young son told police they had been flashed in a common area of their Rogers Park apartment building the morning of March 13.

Police arrested a 50-year-old man at the scene on complaints signed by the victim and charged him with misdemeanor public indecency, according to the report.

The father, 47, said he and his 8-year-old son were on the stairwell when the man exposed his genitals and wiggled around, police said. He stayed in front of the pair and continued to expose himself despite their protests for him to stop. The man was taken into custody without incident, police said.

Lincoln Park Zoo’s Regenstein Macaque Forest grand opening April 2

The Snow monkeys coming to the zoo are native to Japan and are known for their tolerance for extreme climates.

Snow monkey webcams coming

Goodbye snow, hello snow monkeys! The Lincoln Park Zoo has welcomed eight Japanese macaques, also known as snow monkeys, to the brand new Regenstein Macaque Forest, which is celebrating its grand opening next month on April 2.

The snow monkeys have been acclimating to their new environment for the past several weeks, exploring all the habitat has to offer including quick dips in the hot spring, scaling large trees and utilizing micro-climates and hot rocks for a quick warm-up.

“Japanese macaques are such a dynamic, unique species and I’m excited for our visitors to be able to experience seeing these snow monkeys up close,” said Maureen Leahy, curator of primates. “The snow monkeys are adjusting to their new environment very well and can often be seen grooming and interacting with one another.”

Beginning April 2, zoo visitors will have opportunities daily to not only catch a glimpse of these unique primates, but also engage in hands-on learning opportunities and witness behavioral scientists working to acclimate the monkeys to a research booth. Zoo scientists are preparing a broad behavioral and cognitive research program that includes the opportunity for the snow monkeys to operate touch screen computers, making this the most in-depth zoo-based research program for this species in the world. These studies will help scientists understand more about how the monkeys think and learn and feel, and provide valuable mental activity for the monkeys themselves. Visitors to the zoo can learn more about these studies during daily presentations at the exhibit at 11:40 a.m. starting April 2.

“There is still so much to learn about Japanese macaques’ cognitive abilities,” said Katie Cronin, Ph.D., a research scientist. “The touchscreen research booths that are visible to visitors, in addition to a behind-the-scenes research area provide opportunities to explore these questions.”

In addition to the physical experience of visiting the zoo, a newly created micro website will offer a virtual experience. Starting April 2, the website will go live offering a real-time webcam stream showcasing the snow monkeys in action at Regenstein Macaque Forest. The site will offer interactive games, videos and educational material to provide an engaging online learning experience.

Regenstein Macaque Forest is home to five female and three male snow monkeys who came to the zoo from the Japan Monkey Centre, an accredited zoo in Inuyama, Japan, where they have resided for the past several years.

“The zoo community stretches near and far,” said Steve Ross, Ph.D, director of the Lester Fisher Center at the zoo. “Due to the collaboration among accredited zoos, we are able to provide these snow monkeys

Zoo visitors will have opportunities to engage in hands-on learning opportunities and witness behavioral scientists working to acclimate the monkeys to a research booth.

a state-of-the-art exhibit in tune with their preferences and needs based on the knowledge we have gained not only here, but across the world.”

Snow monkeys are native to Japan and are known for their tolerance for extreme climates from sub-tropical lowlands to sub-alpine regions. Some populations of Japanese macaques have been observed cleaning their food before consumption by rinsing it off in nearby water sources.

Public perceptions of monkeys affected by media portrayal

The way that monkeys are displayed in the media, such as in human settings and in contact with humans, can have serious effects on the way that the public perceives those species, according to a new study that publishes on Feb. 25, in the open-access journal PLoS One.

Previous research had demonstrated that the use of chimpanzees as performers in media such as television, movies and advertising, negatively affects public attitudes and the likelihood that someone might seek them as a pet. The degree to which these effects generalized beyond chimpanzees to other primate species was unknown until the current study, co-authored by Steve Ross, PhD of the Lester Fisher Center for the Study and Conservation of Apes at Lincoln Park Zoo.

The results suggest that the manner in which monkeys are displayed in media, can greatly influence how people perceive their suitability as pets as well their emotional state. Showing images of monkeys displayed in human settings, such as in a business office, significantly increased their desirability as a pet, which also correlated with increased likelihood of perceiving the animal as not being endangered in the wild.

“People felt very differently about monkeys depending on the context of the images,” said Ross. “Seeing monkeys around humans and in human settings changed the perception of these species from wild animals that might need our conservation help, to those that might be suitable as a household pet. It’s a stark contrast in how these animals are characterized by the public.”

The study utilized visitor surveys that included a series of digitally altered photographs that showed three different primate species in different contexts and with varying degrees of human presence. By comparing how people characterized monkeys in pictures that showed them in human settings to those in more naturalistic contexts, the investigators were able to determine the influence of the different situations.

The use of monkeys as privately owned pets and as trained performers for movies, television and advertisements has been common practice for decades. These practices have been opposed on animal welfare grounds but these are among the first data to demonstrate the degree to which media portrayals might influence the private pet trade in these species, many of which are endangered in the wild.

“After our study of chimpanzee media portrayals, it was important to understand the degree to which these effects could be extended to other species as well,” said Ross. “Unfortunately there are many more monkeys kept as pets around the world, and these data indicate that the manner in which monkeys are shown in the media is at least one of the factors driving those practices.”

Like chimpanzee “actors,” monkeys trained for the entertainment business often live difficult lives. Monkeys are often removed from their mother at a very young age, their teeth removed for handling, and housed individually away from others of their kind.

“All primates, including monkeys and apes, are cognitively and emotionally complex,” he said. “We have a responsibility to ensure these animals are responsibly managed and importantly, that their wild populations are protected for future generations.”

What kids can teach about life after 50

“Grandma, you’re weird.”

That was my granddaughter’s assessment as I stepped off the train in Edinburgh a few weeks ago and planted a kiss on her cheek.

As is always the case when spending time with a 5-year-old, the next few days were filled with near misses, endless “whys” and unexpected tears – both the good kind and the bad kind.

For the first few hours, I found myself subconsciously battling my granddaughter’s energy. I tried to apply order and steer our conversation to more “useful” topics than “why do dogs eat poop?” But, as usual, after a few hours, I found myself loosening up and enjoying the experience. By the end of the weekend, I was walking around with a stupid grin on my face, exhausted but feeling 10 years younger.

On the way home, I started wondering why we become so darn serious as adults. Do we subconsciously rush to fill the roles that society gives us? Or, do life’s practical considerations conspire to make us conservative and just plain boring? Looking at pictures from the weekend – and, yes, many of them involved chocolate ice cream – I asked myself, “Why can’t we act more like 5-year-olds in our 50s?”

OK, I’m not saying that I would like to actually be a 5-year-old again – honestly speaking, I was the worst painter in my class. And, baking cookies? Don’t get me started! That said, here are a few ways that all of us could benefit from reconnecting with our inner child:

Do you remember how to be curious?

Five-year-olds are an endless source of “why” and “how” questions. They have an insatiable desire to understand how the world works. By the time we reach our 50s, many of us have had our natural curiosity beaten out of us. The older we get, the narrower our focus becomes.

Life after 50 gives us a second chance to get out and explore the world. For so much of our lives, our focus is on other people. We are raising children, navigating careers and trying to hold our marriages (and our own sanity) together. Now, in our 50s, we have the opportunity to be curious again.

What fascinates you? What questions have you always wanted to answer? What passions have you always wanted to explore? What would your 5-year-old tell you to do? Well, “go for it!” of course. What’s the worst that could happen?

Do you talk to strangers?

Kids are naturally trusting – sometimes too trusting. When I was raising my own two boys, it took months of repetition to get them to promise not to talk to strangers. Even then, I’m not sure that they really “got it.” It isn’t until we get a little older that we start to fear the consequences of being kidnapped, or worse.

By the time we reach our 50s, we have taken social interaction to the opposite extreme. We sit on the bus, with our head buried in our phone. We quickly look away from anyone who dares to make eye contact and smile. “Yikes! What did that weirdo want?” Our natural desire to be social has been beaten out of us by a lifetime of broken hearts, dashed expectations and badly scripted TV dramas. It’s a wonder that we get out of the house at all!

The truth is that life is so much safer than we think it is. No one is going to bite your head off if you talk to them on the train. Nine times out of ten, the exact opposite is going to happen. Like wild animals, people are usually much more scared of you than you are of them. I can’t tell you how many amazing conversations I have had simply because I gave someone a genuine smile.

Isn’t it time that we undid some of the social programming that was forced into our brains as kids? Isn’t it time that we start talking to strangers again? There are so many amazing people out there, who share our passions, values and hobbies. We just need to let them into our lives.

Do you love your body?

When you’re 5 years old, your body is the greatest tool you own. OK, sometimes you don’t really take care of it properly, but that’s not the point. For a child, his or her body is a wondrous machine. By the time we reach our 50s, it sometimes feels like we are dragging our bodies around rather than following them into new adventures.

It doesn’t have to be this way. Some of the fittest people I know are in their 50s and 60s. To feel amazing after 50, you don’t need a new body. You need a new attitude.

The difference between being 5 and being 50 is that getting the most from your body requires conscious effort. Our lives are filled with desks and gadgets, not swings and water balloons, so we need to seek out new places to play. Go for a daily walk in the park. Take up weight-lifting. Offer to walk your neighbor’s dog.

Whatever you do, do something! Get out of the house and make the world your playground.

Do you have your whole life ahead of you?

It’s a good thing that 5-year-olds are immortal, because a lot of the stuff that they do is really dangerous! When you’re a kid, you have your whole life ahead of you. Death is a distant concept. It just doesn’t even register. At age 5, you dream of being a fireman, or an astronaut, or a doctor. Life stretches out in front of you into infinity, and you know that there is nothing that you can’t accomplish.

As you get older, life’s realities start to sink in. Your parents push you toward “good” jobs and try to protect you from yourself. Some of us follow our dreams, but most of us compromise and take the safe path. By the time we reach our 50s, it’s easy to feel like we are in the final phase of our lives. Our careers are coming to an end. The world expects us to “age gracefully.” What nonsense!

Would your inner 5-year-old tell you that your life is almost over? Or would he remind you that you can do anything that you set your mind to? According to the Social Security Administration, if you are a 55-year-old woman, you will probably live about 30 more years. Think about where you were when you were 25. That’s how long you probably have left on this amazing planet.

How you spend this time is up to you. Will you “act your age” and spend your days watching TV, sitting still and complaining about the state of the world? Or, will you embrace your inner 5-year-old and see the world as your playground? Will you pursue your passions as if your whole life is ahead of you? Will you learn to love your body and stimulate your mind? Will you take a chance and talk to strangers? If you see me on the bus, I hope that you do. I’ll be the one wearing the t-shirt that says “I’m not in the last stage of life. I’m making a victory lap!”

On Approaching Seventy

Watching the hands of my son kneading challah dough on the maple cutting board in my kitchen, a memory rises of my mother bending over our kitchen table in Flatbush, pressing, stretching, folding flour, water, eggs into a living elastic. Sometimes in my dreams, Mom appears, whispers of her mother in her kitchen in Zurawno in the pre-dawn dark, by the light of the kerosene lamp, pulling and pushing the yeasty challah until my son covers it with a clean white cloth and leaves it in the warm electric oven to rise.

The poem is from Joan Seliger Sidney’s collection Bereft and Blessed published in 2014.

Senior LIVING

How daily breathing awareness is changing my life

The ability to multitask is considered an asset in the workplace. I've often found myself drafting an email, reading incoming messages, editing an article and browsing art for a layout, all seemingly at once. I thought this meant I was pretty close to being as efficient and productive as possible, so imagine my surprise when meditation showed me otherwise.

I've been meditating every morning since December. My guide is a new book by Buddhist writer Lodro Rinzler titled "Sit Like a Buddha," and it's the most accessible beginner's guide to meditation I've read. Rinzler focuses on the calm-abiding meditation called shamatha, which, as he describes it, "wakes you up to what is going on in this very moment, through training in paying attention to something that embodies this moment: the breath."

After about three weeks of 10-minute meditation every morning, I started to feel calmer and less anxious over the course of the day, which motivated me to maintain the practice. I've since upped those 10 minutes to 15 minutes per session and have noticed that I've become a better listener in conversations, more focused when reading and far less prone to general distraction. In fact, I'm getting more done now at work than I ever did with my old approach of multitasking. If an email needs to be written, for example, I set my focus on that alone, and if something distracts me, I'm quicker to recognize the distraction and turn my attention back to the email. Sooner than I know it, a concise and coherent message has been sent, and I'm on to the next task. I still have as much to do every day, but I'm no longer frantically bouncing back and forth between a growing array of half-finished tasks that eventually overwhelm me. Instead, I'm fully engaged in the moment, rather than multitasking it away—an awareness that is starting to shape my life outside of the office, too.

With meditation, I've been able to quiet the peripheral noise and listen to the voice in my head again, the voice I know I can trust to distinguish the decisions that shape a truly meaningful life from the ones that inevitably leave me feeling empty and aimless.

Before beginning the shamatha practice, Rinzler asks the reader to establish a specific intent for why they want to start meditating. Mine was "to become more connected to myself, others, and the universe."

I considered less ambitious intents, such as relaxation or stress-relief, but something about the notion of connection resonated with me. I realize now that the source of that particular intent was my intuition—a voice that I could barely hear anymore over the cacophony of distraction that comes with living in the 21st century. With meditation, I've been able to quiet the peripheral noise and listen to the voice in my head again, the voice I know I can trust to distinguish the decisions that shape a truly meaningful life from the ones that inevitably leave me feeling empty and aimless.

If you don't believe that 10 minutes of daily breathing awareness can lead to those kinds of realizations, all I can say is give it a shot—they just may become the most important 10 minutes you spend every day.

Christian Williams is the editor of Utne Reader, and he also paints and makes music. His art is available online.

Mental health days crucial for boomers

Statistics show baby boomers tend to be the most loyal employees.

They show up on time and try not to take more days off than necessary. Many take pride in never having called out sick. But it is important to realize the absolute need for sick days—even for mental health purposes. The break is especially important for people who rarely get sick enough to take a day off, but who do get frustrated enough to need some time away from the office.

For anyone over 50 who still is working an eight hour, five-days-a-week job, mental health days become extremely important. Here are some signs you might need to take a day off for your mental health's sake:

You aren't enjoying your weekends.

If the stress of your Monday through Fridays is bleeding into your Saturdays and Sundays, you probably need a day off. It's normal to get the "Sunday evening blues" as your weekend draws to an end, but if all you can think about is how much you dread going in to work the next day, you need to take another day to regroup and revitalize.

You lack creativity.

When you're mentally drained, the first thing to go is your creativity. A tired brain results in work that lacks imagination, originality and resourcefulness. You get used to doing the same old things the same old way. Take a hard look at your last few projects. If they're missing the creative edge you usually bring to the table, it's a sign that your mind needs a break.

Little things are setting you off.

You find yourself snapping at everybody no matter where you are, and the smallest things are upsetting. Your co-worker is asking for help, and you're frustrated she asked you instead of trying to figure it out for herself first. Never mind the fact that she thinks you're really good at your job and she wants to learn from the best. If you find yourself in a rage because the person in front of you at the checkout counter is taking too much time to count out exact change, your best course of action is to call in (mentally) sick to work before you snap unnecessarily at someone else.

You're plotting ways to get back at your younger boss.

Yes, he might be a jerk, and he might not treat you with a lot of respect, but if you're spending all of your time and energy trying to figure out how to get back at him or get him fired, you might be sending yourself into an early grave. Thinking those negative thoughts all of the time can only create stress. Instead, try this: the meaner your boss is, the nicer you are to him. It truly is a challenge, but if you continue with "positive thoughts," things are surely to turn around in your favor.

You're bringing your work home every day.

If you're coming home and still talking and/or thinking about what's going on at your job, you need some mental health intervention. Home is supposed to be a place for sanctuary, a place you can go to forget about the troubles of the day. Home is where you should be relaxing and re-energizing and giving loved ones your undivided attention. If you can't do that, a mental health day should be considered mandatory.

When was the last time you took a mental health day from work?

“Welcome to Paradise,” says happy couple

Sally Kinnamon and her husband Ron were among the first to move into The Clare, a luxury retirement community in the heart of Chicago’s Gold Coast neighborhood.

“When we have visitors, I always say, ‘Welcome to paradise,’” said Sally.

“Retirement communities used to have this stereotype of being a place to lay down and die,” Sally continued. “At The Clare, you move into a situation where you can really live. We have an engaged community, wonderful location and fabulous food...it’s a good life. It’s a very good life.”

Sally and Ron had been living in a condominium in the Lincoln Park neighborhood of Chicago for 19 years. When they decided to move to The Clare, the community was still under construction. “It was whimsical actually,” Sally recalled. “We heard about plans to build The Clare and went to learn more, just out of curiosity. They had models at the Hancock Building.” The Kinnamons instantly loved what they saw and made a deposit on their 38th floor, customized apartment. They moved into The Clare in January 2009.

The Clare offers independent living residences, as well as assisted living, memory support, rehab and skilled nursing care, should the need ever arise. “My parents had lived in CCRCs (continuing care retirement communities), and so we knew that was a wonderful option. We can stay here, even if our health changes,” said Sally. “Moving here was a gift to ourselves, but also a gift to our children. They won’t have to worry about our futures.”

The Kinnamons said that hardly a day goes by when they don’t comment on what a great decision it was to move to The Clare. “The sense of community at The Clare is extraordinary. It has been like moving into a fantastic small town. The people are absolutely fascinating, caring, interesting and sophisticated.”

“Sometimes it’s hard to tell how old the residents are here, because they’re all so spirited,” said Sally. “Some of them won’t slow down for anything.”

Although the Kinnamons are retired from their professions, they remain incredibly active. Ron, who was the Assistant National Executive Director for the YMCA, volunteers with organizations including UCAN (Uhlrich Children’s Advantage Network) and Interfaith Youth Core.

Sally, who was a nurse practitioner, volunteers at Northwestern Hospital in a couple capacities. As an associate chaplain, Sally said, “I hope to add a spiritual component to healing, but I also may just be bringing them a cup of soup. We’ll do whatever needs to be done.” Sally is also part of Northwestern’s C.A.R.E. program. “We’re one of only a few hospitals in the country to offer this. It’s an acronym for Care and Respect for the Elderly. We visit with seniors in the emergency room to make long waits more tolerable.”

At The Clare, Sally is chairperson of the hospitality committee. “We make sure that new residents feel welcome,” she said. Ron is involved with The Clare’s Friars Club, which he helped found. “The goal of the Friars is to ‘learn, serve others, and have fun,’” he said.

Life at The Clare has surpassed the Kinnamons’ expectations, “in every way. I had no idea that it would be wonderful to live in the community or to have this amazing staff,” said Sally. “Moving here permits you to leave responsibilities and take advantage of the location and amenities. There are opportunities to keep learning, keep doing things, and have a great life. Nobody is sitting around not doing anything. We’re interested in being involved with life.”

The Clare’s Artist of the Month

Nancy Spilove

Every month, a Clare artist is celebrated with a featured work displayed in the community’s library.

In January, resident Nancy Spilove exhibited her brush painting, “Daisies in the Mist.”

Spilove works in a style popularly known in Japan as Sumi-e (pronounced soo me eh), a spiritually rooted art form that is thousands of years old and highly revered.

Spilove, a retired chef from Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, has studied the Sumi-e style of painting for 30 years. During that time, she has won a number of art guild awards and has exhibited in shows produced by the Sumi-e Society. She follows what is known as the Lingnan School Style, which was established in the 20th century and initiated a free style of painting.

“It is such a contemplative process,” says Spilove.

“To begin with, I go through a process of making liquid ink. I use an ink stick, which I grind on stone and add a few drops of water, slowly mixing them in a circular motion. I say a prayer that my painting is going to be pleasing to everyone, especially to God who gave me the talent. It’s like a meditation. I usually have a picture in my mind before I begin, but making my ink gets me mentally prepared to begin painting.”

The Clare is lucky to have a number of talented artists in residence who share their work with the community.

How to live without regrets

BY MARGRET ALDRICH

If you died today, what would be your paramount regret?

Would you lament the fact that you never got the front porch painted, that you didn't try that hot new restaurant or that there was one more project at work you wanted to wrap up?

Palliative caretaker Bronnie Ware spent years attending to hospice patients during their final weeks of life. In those achingly heavy days, she heard first-hand about her patients' regrets over missed opportunities, botched relationships and squandered joys.

Realizing what these end-of-life wishes could teach the rest of us, Ware collected the top five regrets of the dying for her blog "Inspiration and Chai" and republished them online with the AARP. The list follows:

1. I wish I'd had the courage to live a life true to myself, not the life others expected of me.
2. I wish I didn't work so hard.
3. I wish I'd had the courage to express my feelings.
4. I wish I had stayed in touch with my friends.
5. I wish that I had let myself be happier.

It's easy to inch dangerously close to these common regrets in our own lives. Workaholic family members should know that every one of Ware's male patients regretted putting their job above their children and partners. Skip the late-night conference call!

In addition, Ware says too-busy young parents should beware of 'letting golden friendships grow cold.

"Everyone misses their friends when they are dying," she wrote.

Have a drink with an old pal!

And all of us should remember the most common regret: not being true to oneself. Unleash all of those beautiful quirks and aspirations!

The U.S. edition of Ware's book "The Top Five Regrets of the Dying: A Life Transformed by the Dearly Departing" will be released this month. Gratefully, she hints that the book has a happy ending, noting that each person she cared for came to terms with their regrets and even made major life changes to remedy them.

"People grow a lot when they are faced with their own mortality," Ware said. "I learned never to underestimate someone's capacity for growth. Some changes were phenomenal."

It's not too soon for the rest of us to make changes, either—good health or not. Don't wait.

Reverse mortgages offer new options to senior homeowners

BY BOB KITSOS

After years in senior management, Terry Bivins has decided to work directly with older adults, their families and their financial advisors.

Bivins is senior vice president of the Home Equity Conversion Mortgage National Division at the Federal Savings Bank, 300 N. Elizabeth.

He is scheduled to conduct workshops on reverse mortgages for Money Smart Week. His presentations are set for April 16 at the Parkway Bank and Trust, 4480 W. Lawrence, and April 21 at the Evanston Public Library, 1700 Orrington.

"There is nothing like helping someone improve their financial security and peace of mind with a reverse mortgage," Bivins said.

Home Equity Conversion Mortgages (HECMs) -- or reverse mortgages -- allow seniors to convert the equity in their homes to cash. A financial institution pays cash to the homeowner for the equity built up in their property.

In contrast, with a standard mortgage, a home buyer pays some percentage of the home value as a down payment then pays off the home over time. Traditional mortgages can be structured as fixed-rate or adjustable-rate, and some loans can be designed around paying on principal or paying interest only.

Changes

The HECM loan program experienced a number of changes last October. For example, the amount of funds available to the homeowner in the first year was reduced to 60 percent of the total sum that would become available. The balance of the funds becomes available to the homeowner 366 days after the loan closes.

Another change in the program benefits the spouse of the borrower. Now, non-borrowing spouses under the age of 62 may keep the home as their primary residence after the borrower has left the property or passed away, as long as the spouse maintains the property and pays the taxes and the homeowner's insurance.

The reverse mortgage process generally takes 30-60 days.

"It's a need-based product for additional funds to stay in the house -- a long-term solution for people to retain their home," Bivins said.

About 65,000 HECM applications were processed last year, he added.

The Federal Savings Bank is primarily an originator of home loans providing conventional, VA, FHA and reverse mortgages. The bank is federally chartered and can originate loans in all 50 states.

In addition to a variety of loan programs, the bank also provides checking and savings accounts, CDs and IRAs, mobile banking and online banking videos.

"I continue to be a resource for attorneys, financial planners, CPAs, care givers, estate planners along with banks, savings and loans and credit unions that do not offer HECM products," Bivins said.

Bivins graduated from the University of Illinois Chicago with a bachelor's degree in quantitative methods. He entered the mortgage industry in 1982 after 10 years in the insurance industry. Having learned about reverse mortgages in 1992, he decided to specialize in HECMs in 2003.

A recognized expert in the reverse mortgage industry, he serves as a resource for the State of Illinois Department of Aging and the City of Chicago's Department of Family Services, where he conducts seminars on reverse mortgages. A Lincoln Park resident, he has appeared on WLS-TV and radio and City of Chicago TV and is a nationally approved instructor teaching "An Introduction to Reverse Mortgages for Financial Professionals."

Bivins may be reached at 877-707-9696.

As more younger senior citizens in their 60s join senior centers, the centers are bringing more physical activities to their programs.

Senior centers rev up physical activities

Medill News Service

Senior centers are no longer about Bingo for the 80-year-olds. As more younger seniors in their 60s are coming in, North Center Satellite Senior Center added Zumba dancing, line dancing and more physical activities to the programs.

"Exercise is No.1," said Helen Tubog, a 66-year-old Zumba lover. She dances at the North Center Satellite Senior Center and the Northeast (Levy) Senior Center every week.

"Last January, I said to myself I have to go on," she said. After her second husband, Lorenzo Gabaisen, died in 2013 — only three years after they got married, Tubog decided to keep dancing and started volunteering at the North Center Satellite Senior Center as a dress-making teacher and massage therapist.

"What can I do if I just sit in the house for two years?" she said. "I'm stagnant." Before her husband died, Tubog and Gabaisen danced at the Swingin' Seniors, a senior cheerleader team of the Chicago Bulls. For Tubog, dancing has been a part of life.

While some people are questioning whether physical activities like Zumba are too much for the elderly, Tubog said she's just trying to do what she can. "I have had diabetes since I was three years old," she said. "And I also have hypotension. If I'm not taking the medications, I don't know if I can reach 80. I'm just doing my best."

"We have all the emergency equipments there," said Mary Ann Bibat, vice president of senior services at the Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Chicago. The organization runs five senior centers, including the North Center Satellite Senior Center, a collaborative program with the city of Chicago's senior services.

Bibat said they avoid risky physical activities like mountain climbing, but have brought a lot of creative programs, such as a senior Wii Bowling team, a swimming team for the Senior Olympics, senior proms and flash mobs. "We are seeing a lot more younger seniors coming in, and they want different things compared to the previous generation," she said.

According to 2012 U.S. census, baby boomers are reaching age 65 in record numbers.

Travel solo without a single supplement charge on South of France and Provence River Cruise

Mayflower Tours is waiving the single supplement charge for solo travelers on its 11-day South of France and Provence River Cruise featuring seven nights of accommodation aboard the exclusively chartered river vessel, the MS Bellefleur.

This special solo traveler offer is available on the Oct. 1 departure when booked by April 30 and represents a savings up to $2,534 based on the stateroom reserved.

The 11-day cruise and tour travels the scenic Rhône River Valley from Lyon to the north and Avignon to the south, an important wine growing region famous for its red wines.

On a peaceful and relaxing cruise along the Rhône and Saône, travelers will visit many small towns and villages where they will mingle with the locals, then enjoy a train ride to Paris for two nights and take in the world class sights.

The cultural and social voyage includes balcony staterooms, complimentary wine and meals, and afternoon pastries. Shore excursions are led by fluent, English-speaking guides enhanced by the personal audio headphone system. Onboard events and entertainment also are featured. The modern, well-appointed ship accommodates up to 146 travelers.

"River cruises are ideal for single women," Mayflower Tours director of international product development Carol Specht said. "These comfortable and congenial cruises tend to attract like-minded travelers, and there is a very social nature to the overall experience. Open seating for dining and the ease of the shore excursions pretty much ensures that travelers are always included in the activities as they wish to be."

In addition to waiving the single supplement on the Oct. 1 departure date, Mayflower Tours also is offering a two-for-one airfare special for twin reservations. Travelers who live in specific counties in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and the Tampa/St. Petersburg areas in Florida receive complimentary airport transfers. For more information call 630-435-8500.

Moscowitz to host annual Seder dinner

Attendees will seek to discover the eternal meaning of the Haggadah while enjoying hand-baked shmurah matzah and fine Israeli wines. Together, the group will explore the Seder and its message, which encourages breaking free of the bondage imposed by self-limitation and struggle.

The evening will include a full-course holiday dinner. Cost is $45; anyone who buys a ticket by Sunday will be charged $36, or $20 for students and children age 3-12. Reservations are required. For more information call 773-772-3770.

During a presentation at Creative Mornings, a free monthly conference and networking event, architect Katherine Darnstadt pulled up a photo of people waiting in line for designer cupcakes at a food truck on a freezing Chicago afternoon. She followed that photo with one of people waiting in line for fresh produce at a decommissioned transit authority bus her firm redesigned to serve communities in food deserts across the city.

“Same day, different parts of the city,” she told a crowd of nearly 200 people. “That’s the dichotomy that we do have in this city and we work right at that gap.”

Darnstadt, 33, is a Chicago native and the founder of architecture firm Latent Design, 900 N. Ashland, once an LLC, but now an Illinois Benefit Corporation. Benefit corporations are a new designation for companies that include a social good within their charter and comply with standards measuring social responsibility. Illinois is one of 27 states that recognize the designation.

Darnstadt’s firm specializes in human-centered design, merging traditional architectural practices with social activism.

When she began the firm in 2010, she had $10,000 and a laptop. After earning her architecture license and losing her job in recession lay-offs in quick succession, she took an apprehensive jump into entrepreneurship with the belief that it wouldn’t last forever.

“It was plan B,” she said. “I’ll just start an architecture firm and it will take me through a year and then somebody’s going to hire me.”

But five years later, Darnstadt’s Latent Design is still here. She turned a profit in two years, hired two employees and now generates more than $200,000 in revenues. On the way, Darnstadt’s been named one of Crain’s Chicago Business 40 under 40, received the American Institute of Architects National Young Architects Honor Award, and was listed among GOOD Magazine’s 100 Social Impact Visionaries.

The small firm dedicated itself to its community-minded mission from the outset. Some of the first clients were non-profits and community organizations on the West and South sides of Chicago.

“We spend so much time focusing on the object of the building,” she said in an interview in her bright Ukrainian Village office suite. “So how do you make sure the building impacts the block that it’s on, the neighborhood that it’s in and the people that inhabit it?”

Darnstadt said the firm has also attracted private clients who “believe in the public mission of those public projects that we’ve worked on before.”

One private client, David Zoltan, “Fleet Admiral and leader” of Geek Bar Chicago, worked with Darnstadt on a design concept for the bar’s new location. He commended Darnstadt for her technical ability and ear for the clientele she works with.

“She has an amazing idea of what works functionally and what works aesthetically,” Zoltan said. “It feels fun. And for us, fun is a big deal – we’re designing a bar for geeks.”

In 2013 Latent Design helped create a pedestrian space with wooden seating and foliage over two former parallel parking spaces in Andersonville. In the same year the firm designed Kusanya Café in Englewood using salvaged material and vintage features to help founders create a “safe haven on a strict budget.”

The Lakeview East Chamber of Commerce commissioned Latent Design to create the “Lakeview East People Spot,” a seating area made in two parallel parking spots to serve as a respite from traffic-heavy N. Clark St.

The firm has worked for five years on projects through the Architecture for Humanity’s ACTIVATE! Public Space design competition for five years. The competition challenged participants to repurpose underused public spaces with an installation that would last one year and cost under $1,000.

The firm’s design idea in 2010 was a modular garden created from bright red plywood boxes in a vacant lot in Little Village. The installation was such a success that the neighborhood raised $100,000 and gained the legal right to make it a public community garden.

“Design can bring an emotional connection and awareness of our informal economies,” she said. “You connect with people at such a level that you understand what the building and the space serves. It doesn’t serve the person with the checkbook, it serves the whole entire community.”

Though “sustainable” is the fashionable buzzword around design, Darnstadt takes it a step further to include not only the materials used to produce the structures, but the community that will interact with the finished product.

“When I talk about a sustainable system, I’m talking about all of those other aspects,” she said. “Did we train any new people? Did we create new jobs? Were we able to leverage donated materials? Were we able to create an educational curriculum? Were we able to impact youth? What else have we done?”

Taking on a public mission also means wading through politics, said Latent Design employee Tina Kress. The state’s financial crisis meant grant money the firm was expecting for new projects is now frozen by order of Gov. Bruce Rauner.

“There’s that political climate that seems really abstract sometimes, but can very much affect what we’re doing on a day-to-day basis,” Kress said.

But there are shortcuts in bureaucracy. The firm is self-certified, which tells the city that the business is aware of city codes and will comply with them. Though the certification means taking on more liability, Darnstadt said it means the client could get a permit from a city in a week rather than close to three months.

“Before we got it we would lose projects,” she said. “It would come down to the wire and they would ask us versus other firms if we were self-certified.”

Architect and Creative Mornings attendee Karen Rigg said that as a typical architect she doesn’t reach this level of the compassion for the users.

“This is how you’re taught in school to think about design, it just doesn’t always necessarily work out that way,” she said.

Rigg cited her own affinity for vacations and her mortgage as limits to how mission-oriented she could be in her career.

“Sometimes I think that level of compassion doesn’t necessarily mesh with money,” she said.

Rigg’s colleague Felix Martinez commended Darnstadt for bringing architecture to mass audiences.

“High design sometimes is not experienced by the every day person,” he said. “In this industry you have to pay to play sometimes... It’s good that she’s doing what she’s doing.”

and other famous composers.

ABOUT THE ARTIST :
As an Organ Recitalist, David Troiano has appeared through out the United States, Canada, Europe, and in some of the great Sacred Spaces of Mexico. With particular focus on the music of the Spanish Baroque and the Spanish speaking world, he has been invited to give lectures and recitals to the American Guild of Organists. Always interested in new sounds for the organ, he has commissioned and premiered several organ works. A student of the legendary Marily Mason and Harpsichordist Edward Paumgartner, he was awarded a Doctorate of Musical Arts from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

As a Lyric Tenor, Troiano has been praised for the beauty of his voice, attention to musical detail, and his strong stage characterizations. His tenor voice has been heard in stage roles in Opera, Oratorio, Operetta (including Zazzuelas), and Orchestral Concerts. He has performed in over eighty five recitals of "American Art Song" throughout the United States and Spain to great acclaim.

As a Choral Conductor, Troiano provided musical direction at the Wayne State University's Bonstelle Theater and choral direction for the International Symphony Orchestra's Choral Ensemble. He is currently Director of the Filarets Chorus, a Polish-language ensemble of Metro Detroit and continues to perform regularly with the Civic Opera Guild of Ann Arbor, Michigan.

longer concentrating affordable housing in neighborhoods that already have plenty. While locating affordable housing in low-income neighborhoods makes sense economically since land values are lowest there, a city that prioritizes reducing residential segregation would take a broader view on the numbers. For 50 years neighborhoods like Lincoln Park have driven poor people and minorities out of their community by eliminating any semblance of affordable housing, mostly through dramatic downzoning.

Growing affordable units in profitable housing markets like the North Side offers with higher land values will cost more up front; but the costs of maintaining, or even compounding, segregation by creating communities only the wealthy can afford could be holding the city as a whole back.
