Chicago-based Glenstar and Minnesotan investor Patrick Halloran have purchased the 46-story skyscraper at 500 W. Monroe St.

Loop bargain bin

Sub $100M price for 46-story tower is 76% discount off 2019 price

If Dollar Tree had a real estate office, their busiest store would be in Chicago's Loop where bargain shoppers are sweeping up low-priced properties.

Last week Chicago-based Glenstar and Minnesotan investor Patrick Halloran bought another downtown building at a steep discount, this time it's a 46-story skyscraper at 500 W. Monroe St.

According to Crain's Chicago, the distressed $270 million loan on the building was acquired for less than $100 million. San Francisco-based Spear Street Capital, who surrendered the building through deed-in-lieu of foreclosure, bought the building in Oct. 2019 for $412 million, a shocking 76% discount.

In 2025, when the loan on the tower hit the market, the building was around 75% leased. In 2027, a lease by GE HealthCare's will expire, and 572,000 square feet of empty space will flood the Loop.

Spear Street appears to have pivoted after defaulting on the property in 2025. They have been snake-bitten by dropping prices in Chicago's central business district. To complete their Loop exit, they're also unloading 225 W. Wacker Dr. for another deep discount.

While there's some evidence of a downtown office turnaround, the market has still seen weakened demand overall, according to Crain's. High interest rates, high taxes, crime, businesses fleeing the Loop and the new work from home trend has whacked downtown property values.

Bank robber who spilled loot during Loop getaway gets 40 months in prison

BY CWB CHICAGO

A 24-year-old first-time bank robber who managed to fumble nearly every part of his getaway, including spilling the cash he had just stolen while running through the Loop, has been sentenced to more than three years in federal prison.

Solomon Marshall first entered Fifth Third Bank at 1 S. Wacker Dr. on the morning of March 12, 2024, and asked a teller whether there were any smaller branches nearby. The teller found the question unusual and alerted other branches in the area about a potential robbery. About an hour later, Marshall returned carrying a brown Potbelly's paper bag. He approached the same teller and handed over a note written on a napkin.

"Put your hands on your chest, walk over and have [sic] fill the bag with money. You have three minutes. No one gets hurt."

The teller complied, placing $776 into the bag. Marshall

Residential conversion set for 201 E. Walton

Hotel will become 221 residential units, but offer only 72 parking spots

Last week the Chicago City Council approved the residential conversion of an existing hotel building at 201 E. Walton. It will soon become 221 residential units.

Planned by Churchwick Partners, the hotel is now operated as Sonesta ES Suites, and the developer purchased the property in Sept. 2025. The project will convert the hotel into residential units with a mix of 110 studios, 80 one-beds, and 31 two-beds. The project will only include 72 existing parking spaces.

Before the onslaught of Transit Oriented Development zoning, a project such as this would have been required to include, at minimum, 221 off-street parking spots.

On the exterior, the building's entrance and streetscape will be enhanced with a modern design and new landscaping along the sidewalk and a dog run will be added along N. Mies Van Der Rohe Way.

With City Council approval secured, the site will be rezoned from DX-7 to DR-10 to allow for the conversion of the building.

The developer hopes to proceed with the permitting process now through this Fall. Hotel operations are planned to cease in December, and construction would begin after that.

The developer says work is expected to take 6-8 months with the first move-ins targeted for Spring/Summer 2027.

Man indicted in West Loop, Old Town mail theft burglaries that cost victims up to $100K

BY CWB CHICAGO

A man accused of burglarizing apartment buildings in Chicago's West Loop and Old Town to steal residents' identities has been indicted in a case involving 13 victims, including three older than 60, prosecutors say.

A Cook County grand jury recently indicted Daniel Krichilsky, 45, on two counts of burglary, three counts of aggravated identity theft involving victims older than 60, and one count of identity theft. Prosecutors allege the scheme occurred between April

Daniel Krichilsky

23, 2023, and Jan. 26, 2024, and left victims with losses ranging from $10,000 to $100,000.

Among the burglaries detailed in the indictment, prosecutors say Krichilsky targeted an apartment building in the 700 block of W. Randolph St. in the West Loop on May 18, 2023, and another building in the 1500 block of N. Orleans St. in Old Town on Aug. 17, 2023. The U.S. Postal Inspection Service said the burglaries involved mail theft.

If the allegations are true, the crime spree began while Krichilsky was on bail in another burglary case that stemmed from a July 2022 arrest in Lincoln Park. According to court records, a property manager called police after finding Krichilsky inside an apartment building in the 2000 block of N. Clybourn Ave., allegedly damaging furnaces, an internet server rack, and an office

St. Chrys' Closet seeks new home while continuing to serve needy Chicagoans

BY LILA SARAVANOU

St. Chrys' Closet, a volunteer-run free store that serves migrants, the homeless and low-income Chicagoans, is searching for a new home after being told it must vacate its current location at the Church of the Ascension, 1133 N. La Salle Dr., by Sept. 1.

The organization began more than three years ago as a response to the arrival of migrants in Chicago.

"The closet started as an answer to a Christian response to the migrant issue," said Liz Kohlbeck, who leads the ministry. She said the effort began after Doug Fraser of the Chicago Help Initiative suggested creating several church-based clothing distribution sites across the city.

The original idea quickly evolved into a permanent free store.

"We started in one small room at St. Chrysostom's Church," Kohlbeck said. "Within weeks, we had expanded."

The ministry later moved to the Church of the Ascension, where it has operated for nearly three years. While Kohlbeck said the congregation has been supportive, the church now needs the space for its own growing programs.

"They gave us plenty of notice and told us we had until Sept. 1 to vacate," she said. "We promised them that we would be out in a timely fashion."

Since opening, the organization's mission has expanded beyond serving newly arrived migrants.

"When we started, I would say like 95% of the people that came were migrant population," Kohlbeck said. "We now see not only the migrant population, but we also see a lot of Chicago homeless and the food, clothing and shelter insecure."

She said the organization also serves seniors and people with disabilities living in Chicago Housing Authority residences, along with families referred through neighborhood meal programs and partner organizations.

The free store now averages about 140 shoppers every Wednesday, though many visitors collect clothing and household necessities for entire families. "We may be seeing, physically walking through the doors, 140 [people], but we're serving many times that amount of people," Kohlbeck said.

Beyond its weekly store, St. Chrys' Closet distributes clothing, bedding and other essentials through community partners across Chicago, including schools, shelters and outreach organizations.

The search for a new location remains the organization's biggest challenge.

Kohlbeck said the ministry needs at least 1,500 square feet to continue operating and is exploring vacant storefronts, churches, schools and other available spaces throughout the Near North area. Because the organization relies heavily on nearby volunteers and donors, remaining in the neighborhood is a priority. "We're trying to be as creative as we possibly can," she said.

Wave that flag, wave it wide and high, Happy Birthday America!

By Thomas J. O'Gorman

It's amazing what liberty can do. The list unfolds in epic proportions with the products, inventions, historic accomplishments, geographic expansions and settlement of the American continent ocean to ocean.

Manifest Destiny we once called it. Coined in 1845 by journalist John O'Sullivan, it fueled westward expansion by pioneers, the Mexican-American War, and the displacement of Native American Indians.

The most critical component in the harnessing of liberty, democracy and our Republic these last 250 years has been held in our timing. Embracing the dynamic of liberty at just the right moment is everything. Seeing what liberty can create among us is an astounding historical entity.

The freeing of the individual and the protection of private property from the tyrannical deeds of an aristocratic royal nobility and the collectivism of mob rule.

Everything must fit in its proper order and space. Many Founding Fathers believed our source was God himself.

As our fourth president, James Madison, wrote in Proclamation 20 when our national holiday was first being established - "No people ought to feel greater obligations to celebrate the goodness of the Great Disposer of Events and of the Destiny of Nations than the people of the United States. His kind providence originally conducted them to one of the best portions of the dwelling place allotted for the great family of the human race."

It is essential that our national landscape was first settled by fleeing European Protestant pilgrims. In their consciousness was the belief that we are created for more meaningful living than what they experienced in Europe. Their search was for a worthy life that counted everyone's dignity, rights, religious freedom and political independence as essential.

The time was ripe. The early embrace of basic human rights was a common imperative for all.

Among the kings and landlords there were too many despots. Too many creeps, crooks and absolute rulers from palaces, estates, churches, and military life.

Not enough room, food, or good health among ordinary folk. People needed wider space, more simple living, and better learning. They wanted self-sufficiency and self-determination.

This early potboil of essential rights might seem a long way from Fourth of July parades centuries in the future. But you have to establish the basic needs that brought about the longing for freedom and demand for human rights, that helped to create the greatest nation in world history.

Declaration of Independence, oil on canvas by John Trumbull, 1818; in the U.S. Capitol Rotunda, Washington, D.C.

Is this not the deep hunger that also gave us eventually the American hot dog?

From the first days of the Plymouth Rock settlement to the dumping of tea into Boston Harbor in protest to vengeful colonial taxation, time ripened. Simple folk saw what was hidden in the tannin-soaked sea water of fed up settlers searching for freedom and independence.

The settlers had been radically changed by the landscape that pointed to freedom and the value of the human and the motivated individual. That exposed the hard-working colonial farmers, and their embrace of more expansive living, to the shabby selfish cruelty of the old world economics. And the dead end failure of King George III.

All the freedom farmers needed then were the muskets and lead shot to hasten revolt. The expansive time for education and good judgement refined the brightness and reason that was the perfect push to great American ideals.

The richness of the land, the bounty of boundless landscape, the clever inventiveness of the colonial population was ripe for seeing life in a wild new order. That colonial freshness was enriching. People could thrive here like they never could back in the strictures and confines of Europe.

It is no wonder that bright ideas flourished in the fertile environment.

Inventive thoughts to produce new load-lifting farm implements all the way to fresh understandings about limited government. It was helpful, of course, that leaders in the 13 colonies had erudite minds and weren't afraid of new thoughts and life-altering concepts.

Life in the American colonies was a rich home to expansive concepts of governance. Hardly a primitive landscape. The formation of a dynamic Republic was possible precisely because great thinkers abounded at just the right time. Robust thinking was not scarce. American colonists thrived in their motivation for a form of government unlike any other in the world. And they won the battle of revolution as much with brains and hearts as they did with Minutemen and muskets. Their plans were as large as the landscape itself.

The success of the Founding Fathers' strategies and hungers for fairness succeeded, though, because of their shared unity of purpose. Out of many, one: E pluribus unum, that's our motto. Diversity is not our strength, strength comes in the unity of us all seeking individual freedoms.

The Founding Fathers' willingness allow us to stand united against the thoughtless rule of England, and a distant monarch many believed to be mad. They disavowed parliamentary greed that could not grasp the liberty that breezed freely across the open American land.

From Abraham Lincoln to Franklin D. Roosevelt, through to the present day, these have been centuries for inventing of great things. America is resourceful creating televisions, discovering flight, creating the McCormick reaper combine harvester, rocket ships, atomic bombs, bubble gum, baseball, the jitterbug, the cure for polio, modern art, tap dancing, bell bottoms, the automobile, the telephone, stand-up comics, computers, the Internet and smart phones, a Chicago Pope, Jazz, Rock, Country and Western, Rap, House and the Blues, and the patriotic Grateful Dead band who fused them all together, as Americans will do - mixing, matching and inventing. The Dead told us to "Wave that flag, wave it wide and high" and we did. For 250 years.

And at 250 years, liberty still fertilizes American hearts and minds. Maybe not always to our liking, but near enough to still make the nation feel worthy of our loyalty and patriotic allegiance.

No wonder we still feel what motivated our Founding Fathers, like George Washington as he crossed a freezing Delaware River in a small boat on Christmas night 1776, leading 2,400 troops and artillery through a severe winter storm. Or Thomas Jefferson inventing fresh forms of simple, mundane apparatus no one figured out before him. Or the almost crazed impetus of Benjamin Franklin to measure, dissect, and invent tools and procedures that advanced the modernity of everyday American life. He was more than kites.

The American Republic was, of course, all about invention, consumed with it first and foremost. From the elegant writings of James Madison on the effect and affect of American political life, to the stunning words of sacrifice and affection of patriots like Thomas Paine. As well as the

Ex-cop blasts Chicago mayor's new agency

'Gigantic waste of taxpayer money'

BY JIM TALAMONTI
The Center Square

Mayor Brandon Johnson is not saying exactly how much taxpayers will pay for his new Office of Gun Violence Reduction, but he wants another $20 million to fund jobs for young people.

The mayor signed an executive order June 25 to establish the new office, saying the agency would be tasked with coordinating violence prevention efforts, victim services and community safety investments.

A reporter asked Johnson if his current community safety office would be disbanded.

"The Mayor's Office of Community Safety [OCS] will still function and exist," said the mayor.

Johnson said the OCS deals with the fire department, the Office of Emergency Management and other departments in addition to just police.

The mayor did not directly answer a question about how much the new department might cost.

"You mean to tell me that with 31,000 jobs that we've offered, 57,000 children applied, that as a city we cannot figure out how to come up with another $20 million to make sure that every young person and young adult who wants a job can have a job?" Johnson asked.

The mayor said the ultra wealthy and big corporations should be held accountable.

Chicago Republican Party chairman Chuck Hernandez, a former Chicago Police

Dept. detective, said the new department is a scheme to siphon funds away from law enforcement.

"We already have a department for gun violence and reduction. It's called the Chicago Police Department," said Hernandez.

"We already have a department for gun violence and reduction. It's called the Chicago Police Department," said Chuck Hernandez.

Hernandez said he sees the mayor's executive order as futile.

"This is bad public policy, a gigantic waste of taxpayer money and it ultimately highlights Brandon Johnson's complete lack of courage and unwillingness to combat violent crime in Chicago," Hernandez said.

Retired Riverside, Illinois police chief Thomas Weitzel said the new department is not just a scheme, but a scam.

"It creates bureaucracy instead of deploying officers, that's what this will do. That's not good, and nor are there any measurable outcomes that will come from that," Weitzel said.

The mayor promised that the new office would work with those on the front lines, including police officers and community violence intervention partners.

Johnson said it actually costs more when you disinvest.

"For decades, the people of Chicago have been demanding more from city government, and today, city government responds to those demands," the mayor said.

'Half-baked' social media tax poised to tee up court challenges

BY JONATHAN BILYK
Cook County Record

Illinois is poised to be headed back into court to defend another constitutionally questionable law in their efforts to tax God-given free speech rights.

Tech companies and internet freedom advocates this time are taking aim at a new measure, jammed through with virtually no discussion by Democratic lawmakers, to impose steep "fees" on internet site operators that the state deems "social media" to create a new revenue source to fuel the state's ever-growing spending.

As part of Illinois' bloated new $56 billion state budget, Democratic lawmakers, with the support of Gov. JB Pritzker, slipped in a new measure that Pritzker and other supporters will force "social media" operators to pay the state to make up for the alleged societal damage they say is caused by their platforms and free speech.

Styled as a "fee," the measure would impose a tax to extract potentially hundreds of millions of dollars, or more, every year from a host of companies engaged in the creation of platforms hosting interactive or user-generated content.

Fees that one way or another will be passed onto consumers.

Specifically, the new "fees" will be charged against any online platform operator that the state believes has more than 100,000 users in Illinois. It would scale up progressively based on how many "Illinois users" a platform may have.

The fees would be charged at rates of 100,000 to 499,999 users: 10¢ per user/month; 500,000 to 999,999 users: $40,000 base fee per month, plus 25¢ per user, per month, for each user over 500,000; and over 1 million users: $165,000 base fee per month, plus 50¢ per user, per month, for each user over 1 million.

The fee would be collected by the Illinois Secretary of State's office, rather than the Illinois Dept. of Revenue.

The law specifically forbids companies hit by the fees from attempting to raise prices or implement charges to make "Illinois users" pay the new "fees."

Supporters assert the measure will generate at least $200 million annually for the Illinois state government. Supporters, including Pritzker, assert the money will be used to fund programs to deal with mental health issues, allegedly exacerbated by social media, as well as to fund schools and other state budget priorities.

However, the measure to tax free speech faces a very uncertain future.

A variety of groups, including lobbyists and legal advocates for tech companies and internet freedom, as well as free speech advocates, tax reform advocates, and others, have lined up to pillory what they call a deeply flawed and rushed measure that tramples not only principles of tax legislation, but constitutional protections.

Several groups, including NetChoice, a trade group representing social media companies and other big tech companies, have indicated they may quickly sue the state to challenge the measure.

NetChoice, for instance, is already in court against the City of Chicago over City Hall's attempt to impose a similar tax against social media platform operators. In that lawsuit, NetChoice has argued the city's taxes are unconstitutional because they illegally "single out" social media platforms for "disfavored tax treatment."

While those arguments would likely also be applied in challenges to the state's new "social media" tax, critics of the state measure note the new law is also highly confusing, contradictory at some points, and lacks key details normally essential to effective and constitutional tax laws.

In a recent analysis of the law, Jared Walczak, a senior fellow at the tax policy and economic research organization, the Tax Foundation, noted the law falls far short of defining the terms it supposedly will use to determine how much the state will demand from online platform operators.

To begin, he said, the law doesn't actually define what a "user" is.

"This isn't a philosophical question," Walczak wrote. "It's an eminently practical one."

He noted many users may have multiple accounts on a platform for various reasons, and they may have accounts across multiple platforms operated by one company - for instance, one person may likely have accounts on Facebook, Messenger, Instagram and WhatsApp, all of which are operated by Meta.

"... Is each taxed separately, or is the person treated as a single user across multiple related services?" Walczak asked.

And, he noted, the law is further silent on whether the tax would be applied to only registered users, or if the state could somehow seek to tax the companies based on other determinations of what a "user" may be.

Further, the law doesn't define what an "Illinois user" is. For instance, Walczak asked, must a person live in Illinois to be counted? Are they still an "Illinois user" if they engage with social media while outside Illinois?

"Would it cover a non-resident who accessed their social media accounts from

Did Mayor Lightfoot get snookered into a bad deal with Bally's?

The Home Front
by Don DeBat

Critics sometimes refer to former Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot as “Mayor Lighthouse.” Now, one example of that joke has washed ashore like a dead alewife at Bally’s casino on the banks of the Chicago River at Halsted St. and Chicago Ave.

Some five years ago, Chicago entered into a so-called “Host Community Agreement” [HCA] with the gaming company Bally’s, the city’s choice as the operator of the first Chicago casino.

In that 214-page agreement, brokered by the Lightfoot administration for better or worse, Soo Kim, chairman of Bally’s Corp., made a whole variety of commitments, including how many Chicagoans it would hire and their union status, the level and scope of the amenities in the casino and a bevy of other conditions—unprecedented for a private business in the city, gaming experts say.

The city also demanded payments: $40 million on the signing of the agreement and then an additional $4 million a year in “direct” and “indirect” impact fees.

In return, the city gave Bally’s a monopoly on slot machines, also known as video gaming terminals [VGTs], within city limits. The agreement explicitly specifies that if the city were later to allow VGTs, and Bally’s showed a negative impact on its operations, then the direct and indirect impact fees (that $4 million) “shall be subject to good-faith renegotiation.”

(L) Video gaming terminals. (R) rendering of Bally’s new Casino, under construction in River North.

Bally’s vs. Video Gaming Terminals

First legalized in 2009, video gambling terminals started operating in Illinois in 2012. The state is now home to the largest regulated video gaming network in the world, with a whopping 49,000 of the machines in operation, reports the Illinois Gaming Board.

However, Chicago opted out of VGTs for years until late last year when City Council members, trying to avoid Mayor Brandon Johnson’s proposed corporate head tax, assembled an alternative 2026 budget that legalized the machines to help fill a $6.8 million budget gap.

Last week Bally’s representatives argued that the city’s legalizing video gambling terminals breaches an agreement the casino reached with Chicago. Bally’s said Chicago would lose a $4 million community benefits payment from Bally’s if VGTs are allowed in the city.

Legalized VGTs “will hurt the city’s finances for years to come,” said Christopher Jewett, Bally’s vice president for Corporate Development. “Had we known that within just a few years, this body would reverse course and allow an alternative form of gaming that breaches the agreement, we would never have agreed to the numerous commitments, all of which we’ve held up,” Jewett said.

Jewett warned that under the “worst-case scenario,” legalized terminals could result in the loss of more than a third of the 3,000 permanent jobs Bally’s plans on bringing to the city. He also said that since the machines first became operational in 2012, Illinois casinos have suffered a 37% reduction in gaming revenue.

Soo Kim, Bally’s chairman.

Now, Bally’s says it is considering taking legal action against the city. “We’ve made it very clear that we plan to use all legal weapons available,” Jewett said.

At last week’s City Council hearing, Steven Mahr, Mayor Brandon Johnson’s acting CFO, said the city’s contract with Bally’s will be “at risk” if VGTs are legalized citywide.

Regardless of Bally’s potential for lost revenue, Mahr said the city would earn 4.5 times as much per dollar on casino slot machines as on the terminals, which are set to proliferate in bars and restaurants throughout Chicago thanks to the budget-enhancement deal.

That’s because the revenue from the casino is taxed by the city at a much higher rate (23.2%) compared with the VGTs (5.15%). So, that means the city would need roughly four times the revenue from the non-Bally’s slots to break even, never mind the loss of the discretionary payments.

Is Bally’s claim ‘hogwash’?

Pat Doerr, managing director at Hospitality Business Assns. of Chicago, called Bally’s claim that VGTs would hurt the casino’s bottom line “hogwash” during last week’s meeting. He said casinos across Illinois are surrounded by businesses with such machines yet still stay afloat.

VGTs don’t threaten “well-run” casinos, Doerr said. Chicago had a “stagnant-to-sinking hospitality industry” because it has had to compete with suburbs that allow the machines, he said.

To gain clarity on this confusing situation, the Home Front column reached out to our veteran gaming source—Mr. Zak, a professional gambler—who just happened to be sitting at a video poker machine and winning $400 at Wind Creek Southland Casino in south suburban East Hazel Crest.

“Back in the early days of video gambling, the typical machine paid off 65% of the time,” Mr. Zak noted. “Today, at Wind Creek Casino, the payout is 98% on video poker and 90% on coin-slot machines.” At that rate, Mr. Zak estimates he still loses “only $33 per hour” for “recreational” gaming.

“At its temporary Medina Temple Casino in River North, Bally’s also pays out 90% on slots, but in my estimation, its video poker payouts are short,” Mr. Zak said.

“I think what will happen is the City of Chicago will still put the VGTs in local bars and restaurants, and Bally’s will eventually not pay the $4 million impact fee,” predicted Mr. Zak. “A lot of money will be spent on litigation, and, of course, the lawyers will win.”

The city always does what it wants to do, Mr. Zak noted. “Allowing VGTs in local bars and restaurants will increase the attendance at casinos, when gamblers realize it is a better deal,” he predicted.

Mr. Zak explained that the casino payouts typically are 90% on slot machines, and 98% on video poker. “At bars and restaurants, the video-poker payout will be lower—say 65% to 80%. The bar owners and operators still will make profits. Casinos will make more profits simply because they will have more patrons than bars and restaurants,” Mr. Zak said.

Our gaming source has never been a fan of Bally’s, although Mr. Zak resides on the Near North Side, less than two miles from the Bally’s casino.

“I think what will happen is the City of Chicago will still put the VGTs in local bars and restaurants, and Bally’s will eventually not pay the $4 million impact fee,” predicted Mr. Zak. “A lot of money will be spent on litigation, and, of course, the lawyers will win.”

The recently topped-out casino is replacing the former Chicago Tribune printing plant on 30 acres at 777 W. Chicago Ave. in the River West neighborhood. When open, the gambling facility is expected to further add to the traffic volume in the area.

This bustling intersection is boxed in by the Chicago River, vehicular bridges and Metra railroad tracks—not an ideal site for a mega development. Traffic congestion also includes a steady flow of trucks from a cement plant and other industries on Goose Island. Sadly, when it comes to managing transportation and traffic, Chicago is suddenly bad at this task. We used to be good at Transportation. Now, all the concrete barriers and roadway-blockers City Hall has erected on local streets is strangling the city’s ability to conduct commerce, not to mention the suicidal elimination of commercial street parking in favor of privileged bike paths.

In 2022, Bally’s predicted the casino would pump $200 million annually into city pension coffers. However, Bally’s is not contractually required by the city to actually deliver that amount.

Experts say the choice of the Bally’s site at the nearly impassable corner of Chicago Ave. and Halsted St. is likely the worst possible location for a successful, money-making casino.

“Bally’s bought the deal with a $40-million upfront bribe,” noted Mr. Zak. “The Chicago-and-Halsted site is the most hor-

Mayor's secret $3.3B bid on a $2.53B parking meter asset

Johnson's bad math wouldn't have paid off

BY BOB ZULEY

City Council members have long suspected that City Hall wasn't being completely forthcoming about the pending parking meter sale with 22 alders signing a letter on June 8 accusing the Mayor of withholding critical information.

During the June 25 Finance Committee hearing, Ald. Matt O'Shea [19th] asked the city's attorney, James McDonald, how much the Johnson administration bid was to regain control of the parking meter operation. McDonald said flatly that the bid information was subject to a confidentiality agreement that the city had signed, and refused to answer.

However, James Wyper, a senior managing director at Stonepeak Partners acknowledged the actual $3.3 billion over-inflated bid from the city, and joined Council members to force Mayor Johnson "out of hiding" at the start of the Finance Committee meeting.

Stonepeak Partners is the New York investment firm seeking to acquire Chicago's parking meters from their current owners, Morgan Stanley, Allianz Capital Partners, and the Sovereign Wealth Fund of Abu Dhabi.

Johnson's over-inflated bid is triple the $1.15 billion that the Daley administration received from the 75-year lease in 2008, and a whopping $800 million more than Stonepeak's $2.53 billion bid.

Somebody must have explained math to Johnson, who admitted that the bid offer "would have made a bad deal worse" and withdrew the offer earlier this year.

Wyper described the city's bid as "imprudent given what we know about" the city's precarious finances.

The city's bid would have been financed by "municipal bonds funded against the city's cash flow stream. We were very surprised. We assumed for some time that the city wasn't interested or capable of raising that quantity or magnitude of funds," Wyper told the Finance Committee, noted Fran Spielman of the Sun-Times.

While Chicago could technically issue municipal bonds to buy back the meters, the city's financial experts and the mayor's office determined it was financially unfeasible. The parking meters generate roughly $160 million in gross annual revenue.

Financing a $3.3 billion purchase at municipal bond rates would require debt

Mayor Johnson's bid to buy back Chicago parking meters doesn't add up.

Mayor Brandon Johnson's over-inflated bid is triple the $1.15 billion that the Daley administration received from the 75-year lease in 2008, and a whopping $800 million more than Stonepeak's $2.53 billion bid.

service payments exceeding the annual revenue, creating an annual structural deficit. To cover the massive interest payments, future city councils would have been obligated to continuously increase parking rates for decades. Johnson's poor business skills could have caused Chicago financial strain for decades.

Ald. Matt Martin [47th] reported in his weekly newsletter Friday that while the mayor rescinded his offer at the 11th hour, the Council is still weighing whether Stonepeak may have invested in companies that defrauded U.S. service members, shipped liquified natural gas from Russia, and transported immigrants in aircraft with abhorrent conditions.

Public comment opens on Peoples Gas' proposed price hikes

The Illinois Commerce Commission [ICC] is offering Peoples Gas customers an in-person opportunity to provide comments on the utility's proposed price hikes. The public are invited to attend the public comment forum 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Wednesday, July 15 at Roosevelt Univ., 430 S. Michigan Ave., in the Ida B. Wells Lounge.

Peoples Gas controls effectively 100% of the natural gas utility delivery market (the actual pipeline infrastructure and distribution) on the North Side. They are the exclusive franchised provider for the entire city of Chicago.

Upon arrival attendees will be directed toward the second floor. A table with a sign-up sheet will be available to anyone interested in providing verbal comments during the forum. ICC Administrative Law Judges presiding over the case will be onsite to accept the verbal comments.

Peoples Gas has just filed a rate increase request with the ICC seeking an additional $202.3 million. Representatives from Peoples Gas will offer a brief presentation on their proposed general rate increase. Immediately following the public comment portion of the forum, the ICC staff will hold a question-and-answer session.

Since 2011, Peoples Gas has raised its base delivery rates by $499 million, or 98%. This does not include the variable cost of the gas itself, which fluctuates based on the market, or additional rate hikes—such as the record $303 million increase granted in 2023.

Those unable to attend the forum may submit comments via the ICC website or by calling 1-800-524-0795.

Independence Day at the Chicago History Museum

Starting at 6:30 p.m., Saturday, July 4, the Americana Concert Band returns to the Chicago History Museum for a free outdoor concert featuring patriotic favorites, an inspiring spoken-word performance, and a special appearance from an Abraham Lincoln Reenactor.

The Museum's North & Clark Café will be selling Chicago-style hot dogs, sodas, and ice cream on the Plaza from 4:30 to 7 p.m.

Seating will be provided in the Plaza, 1601 N. Clark St., and guests are welcome to bring their own lawn chairs or blankets. A free RSVP is requested, visit <https://www.chicagohistory.org/event/americana-concert-band-performance/>. The museum will be open during the performance for bathroom access.

After the concert, visitors can head over to nearby North Avenue Beach to watch the Navy Pier fireworks.

Lawmakers boost their salaries to over $100,000

BY LILLY ROSSI
Illinois Policy Institute

Lawmakers boosted their salaries to over $100,000. Their base pay has risen almost 50% since J.B. Pritzker became governor, compared with just a 30% increase for Illinoisans.

Illinois lawmakers have now pushed their salaries to over six figures.

Their base pay will rise to $101,450, fourth-highest in the country for state lawmakers, in the budget Gov. J.B. Pritzker signed June 16.

Add in meals and lodging and bonuses for leadership and committee positions and the average total compensation will be just under $134,000.

Since Pritzker took office in early 2019, Illinois lawmakers have given themselves raises totaling nearly $34,000 in base pay. That's a nearly 50% increase, far outpacing the 30% rise Illinoisans have seen in that time.

Pritzker argues that higher pay will help attract and retain talent in government. Others argue that well-paid lawmakers "are less susceptible to corruption and can devote more time to constituents."

Yet despite their high pay, Illinois was the second-most corrupt state in a late 2023 report as measured by federal corruption convictions since 1976.

The face of Illinois corruption is Michael Madigan, 84, who ruled the Illinois House for 36 years, longer than any legislative leader in U.S. history. Known as "The Velvet Hammer," he quietly used his power to build a political machine that controlled Springfield and converted that power into personal and political gain.

A federal jury found Madigan guilty on 10 counts of bribery, conspiracy and wire fraud, concluding that he used his office to reward allies with no-show jobs and contracts in exchange for favorable legislation. U.S. District Judge John Robert Blakey called it "abuse of power at the highest level."

On April 27, a federal appeals court upheld Madigan's conviction.

Paying lawmakers well cannot eliminate corruption. Illinois can combat corruption by tightening lax conflict-of-interest rules. Lawmakers should be barred from working as lobbyists and property tax attorneys.

Despite passing almost 400 bills this session, lawmakers boosted their own pay while fumbling any opportunities to lower taxes and increase the state's housing supply.

TAX from p. 3

Illinois at some point during the month, perhaps during a layover at O'Hare or while in Chicago for a convention?" he asked.

Walczak and others have noted the law's potentially sweeping effect, threatening to loop in companies most people may not associate as being subject to the tax.

While supporters of such taxes have pointed to large social media companies, like Meta, Google and other operators of prominent social media sites, Walczak noted the measure could also impose a potentially crushing tax on lesser sites like AllTrails, a platform on which users can share route maps and other information about their favorite hiking trails.

"A social media platform is a website or internet medium that 'permits a person to become a registered user, establish an account, or create a profile,' permits sharing and viewing of user-generated content, and 'primarily serves as a medium for users to interact with content generated by other users of the medium,'" Walczak wrote. "This captures Facebook, X, LinkedIn, Instagram, YouTube, and Reddit, among others. But how about Yelp, Nextdoor, Substack, GitHub, WhatsApp, or Telegram? The language is unclear."

But beyond the problems with legal definitions, Walczak and others have noted the potentially unconstitutional nature of the law's proposed penalties.

The law would allow the state to impose penalties on companies that don't pay up what the state believes they owe. The penalties would be "an amount equal to 100% of the unpaid fee and any penalties each month until the fee is paid."

Walczak noted such compounding costs could be "astronomical" and subject to the determination of the Secretary of State's office.

"Bear in mind that at some point, fines become unconstitutionally excessive," said Walczak.

The return of the Stamp Act?

But the measure could legally fail at other key points, as well. Free speech advocacy group, the Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression [FIRE], has said it believes the social media tax falls far short under the First Amendment.

"Pinpointing where exactly the problems that doom this proposal begin is a tall order," FIRE wrote in an analysis.

The Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression and other observers have noted the measure's constitutional infirmities date back to the very foundation of the American republic, as they equated such "social media taxes" to the British 1765 Stamp Act that helped to trigger the American Revolution in the first place.

FIRE asserted the measure amounts to an unconstitutional "regulation of speech."

They and other observers have noted the measure's constitutional infirmities date back to the very foundation of the American republic, as they equated such "social media taxes" to the British 1765 Stamp Act that helped to trigger the American Revolution in the first place.

The Stamp Act required publishers to pay a tax to obtain a stamp on all published works to show they had been approved by the government.

In the centuries since the Revolution and the establishment of the First Amendment, in large part in response to the excesses of the British Crown, courts in the U.S. have repeatedly struck down attempts by states and tyrants to impose taxes aimed at publishers.

FIRE predicted Illinois' tax on "social media" is also doomed. "We're not surprised to see a proposal like this filled with ambiguities and holes. As states have attempted to turn around the losing streak social media regulation has faced in court, we've seen a number of half-baked schemes to find some kind of creative workaround," FIRE wrote.

"States have tried to avoid scrutiny by casting their speech restriction as regulating 'design choices,' by targeting platforms through the app store, and by labeling their target 'conduct' rather than 'speech.'

"Fortunately for free speech, the courts aren't impressed. An attempt to punish speech is an attempt to punish speech, any way it's structured," FIRE wrote.

Critics have also pointed out what Walczak called the "laughably incomplete" nature of the legislation, passed hurriedly as part of the state budget at 4 a.m. on June 1, the final day of the spring legislative session in Springfield.

Despite state constitutional provisions supposedly requiring all legislation to be read in each chamber on three separate days, the measure was rushed through by Democratic leadership using legislative maneuvers blessed by the Illinois Supreme Court under a legal doctrine, by which the House Speaker and State Senate President can simply sign a document affirming all constitutional rules were followed in passing the legislation.

"The concept of a social media platform tax had been in the governor's budget proposal for months, but language was only provided with the enactment of the budget early the morning of June 1," Walczak wrote. "Lawmakers and the public had no time to review the text before the vote."

"And while the governor's team had months to work on the idea, they seem not to have made good use of their time, because the new tax is silent on crucial points and contains a litany of errors and inconsistencies across a few short pages of text. It would be hard to take the new tax seriously, except that it's now Illinois law."

For its part, NetChoice had attempted to warn Pritzker of the perceived legal and constitutional infirmities baked into the "social media tax" proposal.

The organization laid out its case in a letter sent to the governor and also posted publicly on its website, calling on Pritzker to veto the tax, as well as a separate tax the state has now imposed on digital ads.

They warned the governor the tax, even if it were upheld, would

High-profile developments fail one fundamental test

Several recent high-profile development deals fail one fundamental test: appropriateness. Before debates over density, financing, architecture, or economic benefits begin, every proposal should answer one simple question: Is it appropriate for its location? If a project fails that test, no amount of marketing, political support, or attractive renderings can overcome the mismatch.

Recent proposals illustrate the problem. Some would overwhelm neighborhoods by displacing businesses, public amenities, parking, and the everyday conveniences that make communities function. Others would replace long-established community assets with projects that are simply too large for their surroundings. Good planning should strengthen those assets, not diminish them, while respecting the character that residents and businesses have built over generations.

These proposals are part of a

Difficult for anyone to imagine

Thomas O’Gorman asks if we could “imagine” the current Chicago mayor helping John Kennedy become president? Indeed at the 1960 Democratic convention Richard M. Daley delivered Illinois delegates to Kennedy. Yet O’Gorman not surprisingly does not inform us of Daley’s performance at subsequent conventions.

At the 1968 convention held here in Chicago, Daley was roundly booed on national television on numerous occasions when his name was mentioned. The chairman of the Wisconsin delegation was applauded when he proposed from the convention floor that the convention adjourn and move to a safe city.

When Daley responded it was difficult to hear him as he was so loudly shouted down. Then at the next national Democratic convention in 1972 Daley and his hand-picked delegates were expelled from attending much less participating in the proceedings. He was not even allowed on the convention floor!

He was back in attendance at the following national convention in 1976 which would be his last. He had only a small role in helping Jimmy Carter win the nomination with almost no role at the convention. He also complained about his seating arrangement on the convention floor. Carter won the election but Daley was quite upset when he saw the plans for the presidential inauguration that he was to be seated behind a pole thereby keeping him essentially out of sight.

He died before suffering that humiliation.

It would be most difficult for anyone to “imagine” Mayor Johnson if he is still mayor being expelled at the next national Democratic convention and not even being allowed to be on the convention floor. That dubious and infamous distinction is unique to Old Man Daley.

Fred Case, Lake View

broader redevelopment strategy resulting from a series of zoning decisions. Planning determines what should be built. Design determines how it should be built. Before discussing architecture, building mass, height, density, or the number of units, cities must first determine whether additional development rights are appropriate for the site. When project design precedes sound planning, the process is turned upside down.

Successful cities grow by adding to what makes neighborhoods work rather than subtracting from it. Development should strengthen neighborhood character, respect scale, preserve essential services, improve the way a community functions, and leave future generations with places they value. Appropriateness should always be the first test. That is the role of planning, not design.

Ald. Vasquez speaks with forked tongue

Many Chicago aldermen have shown chutzpah. Ald. Andre Vasquez [40th] raises his hypocrisy to an art form. He seems to lie out of both sides of his mouth.

Vasquez stood up at a City Council meeting and decried the parking meter deal, trying to pander to the common man. Back in the neighborhood though, Vasquez panders to the billionaires.

By taking parking spots out of circulation on Catalpa Ave. in Andersonville, Chicago taxpayers have to reimburse the parking meter company for lost revenue. Not for actual lost revenue, not for projected revenue but for potential revenue. So that metered spot that is unused overnight, still generates the company revenue 24/7/365 if taken out of circulation temporarily for street festivals or for conversion to a plaza. For the next 58 years.

So explain again, why does Catalpa Ave., a critical roadway connecting Clark and Ashland, need to be converted to a pedestrian plaza?

To remember a trans activist? Why? Is Andersonville a hotbed of MAGA Country? Or to pay off the billionaires who control Ald. Vasquez?

And I thought dogs made the best pets, not aldermen.

Forty-eight parking spots at half a million dollars per spot comes out to $24 million, just to buy out the parking meter contract for the plaza. Think of how many poor children that money could have helped instead.

It came out in a City Council hearing that the taxpayers, you, me, your parents, my parents, but probably not Andre Vasquez, have reimbursed the parking meter company $246 million out of the $1.15 billion we sold the meters for, in “lost revenue.”

That’s 21% in just 16 years. At that rate, we will give back all the money the City received up front.

We gave away the meters for nothing. Just what Andre Vasquez’ billionaire bosses wanted.

Random murder of Divvy bike rider in Grant Park is solved with license plate reader technology

Chicago police used license plate reader technology to quickly locate witnesses and then make an arrest in the completely random murder of a Divvy bike rider in Grant Park June 15, prosecutors said as they charged a 19-year-old man with the murder.

According to prosecutors, Eliel Argudo-Tenorio was part of a birthday gathering that began at a Chicago residence before a six-car caravan traveled to the 300 block of E. Jackson Dr. in Grant Park late on June 15. The group parked in a line along the curb, got out of their vehicles, and drank alcohol, prosecutors said. Surveillance footage reviewed by investigators captured the events that followed.

About 30 minutes after the group arrived, Malik Jones, 27, turned his Divvy bike off Lake Shore Dr. onto Jackson and headed toward the group. Prosecutors said Jones had no connection to anyone at the party. Video footage allegedly showed Argudo retrieving a handgun from the front passenger window of a vehicle in the caravan moments later. Prosecutors said he immediately pointed the weapon at Jones as the cyclist rode away and looked back toward the group.

Jones then disappeared from the camera's view, followed by Argudo, prosecutors said. A moment later, Argudo allegedly fired a single shot, striking Jones in the right thigh. Prosecutors said he then returned the handgun through the passenger-side window of the vehicle where he obtained it, ran back to a white Mazda in the caravan, and climbed into the rear seat.

The entire group quickly got back into their vehicles and drove away toward Michigan Ave., according to prosecutors, and they were gone before police arrived. CPD officers found Jones lying on the ground near where the caravan had been parked. Investigators recovered a single .45-caliber shell casing from the scene. He was transported to a hospital, where he died from his injuries.

Investigators quickly developed leads after a license plate reader captured the registration of the white Mazda that Argudo used to flee the scene. Chicago police distributed the plate information to patrol units across the city, and officers located the vehicle less than three hours later in the 4200 block of N. Hamlin Ave. Three members of the birthday party were inside the Mazda when police found it. According to prosecutors, two immediately identified Argudo as the shooter. A third witness told detectives that Argudo had been armed but claimed not to have seen the shooting itself.

One witness also told investigators that after Argudo climbed back into the Mazda following the shooting, he repeatedly admitted what he had done.

"I blew, I blew, I blew," the witness recalled him saying, according to prosecutors. The witness said Argudo also stated that he had "messed up." Detectives subsequently located two additional witnesses who also identified Argudo as the gunman, prosecutors said.

Investigators arrested Argudo at his Oak Park home later the same day. He is charged with first-degree murder. Judge Antara Rivera ordered him detained pending trial.

According to prosecutors, Argudo's juvenile record includes adjudications for possession of a stolen motor vehicle in 2024 and burglary and unlawful weapon possession in 2023.

He stabbed a Blue Line passenger because eye contact 'triggers' him

Aaron Hawkins, inset, and surveillance images of the suspect.

A 28-year-old man told Chicago police he randomly stabbed a stranger aboard a CTA Blue Line train in the Loop because eye contact "triggers" him, officials said during a court hearing June 24. The South Loop resident was identified as the assailant after Chicago police released surveillance images of the suspect to the public following the attack.

Aaron Hawkins faces three counts of aggravated battery in connection with the June 3 assault, in which he allegedly stabbed a 38-year-old man multiple times in the neck and underarm while the train was near the LaSalle St. station. Officials said the victim was seriously injured and required stitches after the attack, which was entirely random.

Hoping to drum up leads, CPD released a set of CTA surveillance images to the media on June 14, a decision that paid off, according to Hawkins' arrest report. On June 23, Hawkins walked into the Central (1st) District police station and surrendered to face charges. Officials said his mother had recognized him in the CPD bulletin, and Hawkins also identified himself as the man seen on the Blue Line images.

At a court hearing June 24, Judge Antara Rivera ordered Hawkins detained, saying he is "a danger to the community should anyone look at him."

Judge acquits ex-CTA worker of murder in downtown Blue Line beating death

A former CTA customer service agent who was charged with murder after a man he beat at a downtown Blue Line station died, has been sentenced to two years of probation, after a judge found him guilty of less-serious aggravated battery charges at a bench trial, court records show.

Emmett Richardson, who worked at the LaSalle Street Blue Line stop, was found guilty last month by Judge Carol Howard of aggravated battery of a transit passenger and aggravated battery in a public place. But Howard found him not guilty on two counts of first-degree murder. On June 22, the judge sentenced him to 24 months of probation and ordered him to complete 20 hours of community service, court records show.

The charges stemmed from the death of Kevin Powell, 54, on March 25, 2023. Prosecutors said Richardson found Powell asleep on the platform around 3:17 a.m., next to a wheelchair loaded with belongings, and attacked him for more than an hour without provocation. Richardson kicked the wheelchair out from under Powell, knocking him to the ground, then kicked Powell's property across the platform, prosecutors said.

From there, prosecutors alleged, Richardson shoved Powell onto an escalator and followed him to the mezzanine level, where he yanked him over a railing, causing Powell to fall on his back. Richardson allegedly dragged Powell across the mezzanine floor, struck him with a cardboard drink carrier, and hauled him to the top of a staircase, first by his hood, then by his feet. There, prosecutors said, Richardson flipped Powell down the stairs feet-over-head, treating him "like so much garbage," in the words of former Assistant State's Attorney Lorraine Scaduto.

Chicago man convicted of running meth pipeline to Iowa on Greyhound buses

A Chicago man who allegedly hauled methamphetamine to Iowa on Greyhound buses, sold it to customers, then returned home to restock before making the trip again, has been convicted on federal drug trafficking charges. A jury in Cedar Rapids found Jonathan Quinn Carter, 37, guilty of eight counts of distributing methamphetamine and aiding and abetting the distribution of methamphetamine after a three-day trial and about five hours of deliberations.

The case offered jurors a glimpse into what prosecutors described as a simple but lucrative pipeline: Carter would travel from Chicago to eastern Iowa carrying pound quantities of ice methamphetamine, distribute the drugs, then head back to Chicago to replenish his supply before repeating the cycle.

Federal authorities first took notice of Carter in Nov. 2024 when Illinois State Police allegedly found four pounds of ice methamphetamine in a vehicle he occupied during a traffic stop in Grundy County while he was traveling toward Iowa, officials said. Investigators later enlisted a confidential informant in Iowa who made a series of controlled drug purchases from Carter while law enforcement tracked his movements between Chicago, Cedar Rapids, and Iowa City last summer.

According to evidence presented at trial, Carter frequently traveled between Chicago and Cedar Rapids, transporting multiple-pound quantities of methamphetamine from the city to customers in Iowa.

One of those trips occurred on Aug. 10, 2025, when Carter stepped off a Greyhound bus from Chicago carrying what prosecutors described as a large, black, heavy duffel bag. Later that day, a confidential informant completed a controlled purchase of methamphetamine from him.

Within two days, Carter had gone to Chicago and returned to Iowa carrying only a backpack, officials said. Prosecutors argued the timing and circumstances suggested he had traveled home to replenish his drug supply. Carter's attorneys countered that the trip was an innocent trip to Chicago, "a large city with a lot to offer in the summer besides drugs." In Carter's case, the government said, the large city kept offering methamphetamine.

Nine days later, Carter met his demise as investigators watched him return to Iowa City on a Greyhound bus from Chicago. He placed a duffel bag in the trunk of an Uber but kept a backpack with him as he climbed into the rideshare and headed toward Cedar Rapids, prosecutors said.

When officers stopped the Uber for a defective headlight, they found approximately two pounds of methamphetamine in the backpack, according to trial testimony. Prosecutors also presented evidence that law enforcement officers purchased half-pound quantities of ice methamphetamine from Carter five times and that he helped arrange three additional drug transactions involving similar amounts.

Carter remains detained while awaiting sentencing. He faces a mandatory minimum of 15 years to a maximum of life imprisonment, along with a fine of up to $20 million.

Assailant shoved 69-year-old down CTA Red Line staircase

Surveillance images of the person suspected of pushing a 69-year-old man down the stairs at the Chicago-State Red Line station.

Chicago police are asking for the public's help identifying a suspect who pushed a 69-year-old man down the stairs inside a CTA station near the Magnificent Mile on June 24.

Mass Transit Detectives say the suspect approached the victim from behind as he walked down the staircase inside the Chicago-State Red Line CTA Station at 800 N. State St. around 1:50 p.m. June 24. The assailant grabbed the man's shoulder and shoved him down the stairs before fleeing the station, leaving the victim with "minor" injuries, according to CPD.

Police described the suspect as a Black male between 16 and 18 years old, 5-foot-6 to 5-foot-8, weighing between 150 and 170 lbs, with a light complexion. He was last seen wearing a green and black camouflage balaclava on the lower part of his face, a black hoodie, black pants and grey gym shoes.

Anyone with information is asked to contact Mass Transit Detectives at 312-745-4447 or submit an anonymous tip at CPDTIP.com, referencing case number JK-307232.

Paroled Boystown rapist with ankle monitor accused of groping 6-year-old, but her mom's photo cracked the case

A man on parole, house arrest, and electronic monitoring for raping a woman in a Boystown alley 19 years ago sexually abused a 6-year-old girl at a South Side bus stop last weekend, prosecutors say. But the girl's mother managed to take a picture of the man before he got away, and an anonymous tipster recognized him when Chicago police released the image to the public earlier this week.

That tip led police to James Spencer, 41, a registered sex offender who is now back in the Cook County jail after Judge John Hock ordered him detained June 25 on a charge of aggravated criminal sexual abuse of a child younger than 13. The state is now reviewing Spencer's parole status.

According to a detention petition, the girl was waiting with her mother and 8-month-old brother at a bus stop on the corner of State and 87th around 7:40 p.m. June 20 when Spencer parked at a nearby store and walked directly toward the family, bending down several times to get close to the girl. Prosecutors said the girl's mother noticed Spencer walking up behind the child, so she pulled the girl away and told Spencer not to touch her.

The bus arrived moments later, and Spencer boarded behind the family. Prosecutors said he then pretended to fall, began yelling, abruptly got off the bus, and walked away. The girl, who was visibly shaken, told her mother Spencer had grabbed her "part" and demonstrated the squeezing motion with her hands, according to prosecutors.

Infuriated, the mother got off the bus with her children and searched for Spencer. She found him at a nearby grocery store, where she snapped a photo of his face, which she later turned over to Chicago police. Chicago police issued a community alert June 21 using the photograph taken by the girl's mother. On June 22, an anonymous caller identified the man as Spencer, prosecutors said.

When detectives questioned Spencer, he allegedly admitted he was the man seen in surveillance video of the incident and in the mother's photograph. Prosecutors said he also acknowledged being at the bus stop, but claimed any contact with the girl was unintentional and caused by "stumbling."

During his detention hearing on June 25, prosecutors detailed two violent crimes against women that Spencer committed in Boystown early on Sept. 14, 2007. Shortly after 4 a.m., Spencer approached a woman from behind in the 800 block of W. Cornelia Ave., grabbed her by the neck, slammed her to the ground, stole her phone, and fled down the 3400 block of N. Elaine Pl.

There, he encountered a 40-year-old woman walking home with snacks she had just purchased at the 7-Eleven at Halsted and Roscoe streets. Spencer attacked her from behind, threw her to the ground, grabbed her by the neck, and threatened to kill her, officials said. He dragged the woman into a nearby alley, removed her clothing, and sexually assaulted her. Neighbors heard the woman's screams and called 911. Officers arrived in time to see Spencer still on top of the woman with his pants down. As he tried to escape, he threw the phone he had just taken from the robbery victim.

Spencer was sentenced to 15 years in prison for criminal sexual assault with a concurrent seven years for the robbery. He later received a concurrent five-year term

Man charged with beating, robbing Bally's employee inside casino restroom

BY CWB CHICAGO

A 32-year-old man is facing robbery charges after prosecutors said he and three other assailants attacked and mugged a Bally's Chicago employee inside a restroom at the company's temporary River North casino late last year.

Abraham Pozo, of Beach Park, is accused of participating in the Dec. 29 robbery inside the casino at 600 N. Wabash Ave., where prosecutors said a 26-year-old employee was beaten and robbed of his watch after being confronted by a group of men who asked about his gang affiliation inside a restroom.

According to the detention petition, the employee was washing his hands around 2 a.m. when several men approached him and asked what gang he belonged to. After he replied that he was not in a gang, one member of the group blocked the exit while two others began punching him. As the victim fell to the floor, two more men, including Pozo, entered the restroom and began kicking him, prosecutors said.

While the victim was on the ground, one of the attackers, allegedly Pozo, reached into his pockets, demanded his watch, and removed it from his wrist, according to the filing. The group then fled the casino and was captured on surveillance video entering a silver Honda, with its license plate visible. Investigators determined the vehicle was registered to Pozo.

Casino security personnel also reviewed surveillance footage and found that Pozo and the other men had presented identification when entering the casino. Prosecutors said Pozo scanned his passport at the entrance, allowing detectives to confirm he had been inside the casino at the time of the robbery.

The case hit a roadblock when the victim was unable to identify Pozo in a photo lineup. But investigators caught a break last month after Pozo was arrested at Soldier Field on a misdemeanor battery charge. Detectives sent surveillance images from the casino to the cops, who arrested Pozo at the stadium and asked if they recognized him. Both identified the person in the photos as Pozo, according to prosecutors.

Judge Luciano Panici, Jr. detained Pozo, who faces one count of felony robbery.

Shortly after the robbery, a Bally's spokesperson acknowledged the incident in a statement provided to this reporter.

"Bally's Chicago is aware of a security-related incident that occurred on our property late last evening," the spokesperson said. "The safety and well-being of our guests, team members, and community remain our top priority. We are working with local authorities and our regulatory body actively on this case. Bally's remains committed to maintaining a safe and secure environment."

When judges release dangerous criminals, there are ways for prosecutors to fight back. In Cook County, that almost never happens

BY CWB CHICAGO

After Alphonso Talley allegedly killed Chicago Police Officer John Bartholomew and critically wounded another officer at Swedish Hospital April 25, Cook County State's Attorney Eileen O'Neill Burke blasted a judge for placing Talley on electronic monitoring [EM] months earlier. But court records show her office never asked the judge to reconsider his release order, never appealed it, and did not try to jail Talley when he violated EM rules.

Talley is also accused of beating and robbing a Family Dollar cashier before shooting the two officers with a gun prosecutors said he kept hidden on his body after being arrested. A seven-time convicted felon, he had absconded from electronic monitoring six weeks earlier while awaiting trial on armed carjacking and armed robbery charges.

"EM is not an alternative to detention. It does not keep people safe," O'Neill Burke said April 28, calling the county's monitoring program "broken."

But defense attorneys and former prosecutors who spoke with this reporter said that while Burke's office is quick to criticize judges when things go wrong, it rarely challenges questionable pretrial release decisions in court.

"If they're going to argue that [EM] doesn't keep the community safe, this is the case to use," said a defense attorney who asked not to be identified, pointing to the fact that Talley was already on electronic monitoring in April 2025 when he allegedly carjacked a woman at gunpoint and then robbed a man at gunpoint minutes later.

On Dec. 11, 2025, Talley was placed on an ankle monitor by Judge John Lyke despite being jailed for eight months on the new charges, having two other felony cases pending, and carrying previous convictions for four robberies and a gun possession charge.

While Burke and other public officials are now criticizing Lyke's decision, records show the Cook County State's Attorney's Office never asked him to revisit it.

Not only that, but when Talley had a string of EM violations in February, including some during overnight hours, an assistant state's attorney only asked Lyke to give Talley a verbal warning, adding that Talley "seems to be complying now."

That was the last time Talley appeared in court before he disappeared.

Talley is not a one-off. Records show Burke's office also failed to ask a judge to reconsider the EM release of Lawrence Reed, the man accused of setting a woman on fire aboard a Blue Line train in the Loop last November.

In a statement, Burke's office said it has "limited options" to fight problematic release decisions and pointed to appeals and a filing called a Motion for Relief as tools it has used with some success.

"Using these approaches, we have successfully reversed rulings and secured detention for defendants charged with the following offenses: criminal sexual assault, kidnapping, attempted first-degree murder, and aggravated vehicular hijacking," the office said.

CWB Chicago found two cases in which Burke's office successfully used a Motion for Relief: a suburban case in Dec. 2024 involving a man accused of kidnapping and raping a 16-year-old girl, allegations prosecutors said were supported by DNA evidence, and a Chicago case last spring in which prosecutors said a judge released a woman accused of shooting someone during a bar fight based on "demonstrably inaccurate" claims made by a defense attorney.

Such motions are extremely rare in Cook County, and Burke's office declined to discuss any appeals or motions that may be pending.

If a Motion for Relief fails, prosecutors can take the matter to an appellate court under Supreme Court Rule 604. Legal researchers working for CWB Chicago found 35 appellate court orders related to pretrial release decisions filed by state's attorneys across Illinois during the cashless bail era. None came from Cook County.

"If the state thought Judge Lyke's decision was wrong and that the community was in danger because of Judge Lyke's decision, then Rule 604 allowed for an appeal of Judge Lyke's decision and allowed a request for continued detention during the appeal," said one attorney. "It's a failsafe valve that would have gotten at least three Illinois appellate judges involved."

A source within the Cook County State's Attorney's Office said the office is cautious about filing appeals because an unfavorable ruling "may establish binding precedent with a negative impact" on public safety.

That caution may be understandable in some respects. Illinois appellate courts have shown a strong tendency to defer to lower court judges when the question at hand is a defendant's "dangerousness." As the Fourth District Court of Appeals wrote in one opinion, "This court will not substitute our own judgment for the judgment of the circuit court simply because we would have analyzed the proper factors differently."

"That can create an environment where a circuit court judge making bad pretrial release decisions goes unchecked because the appellate courts are operating on the premise that lower courts are using sound judgment," a former prosecutor said.

Of the 35 cases researchers found from other counties, 16 directly challenged a judge's finding that a defendant could safely be released under set conditions. Appellate courts reversed and remanded in only four of them, or 25%.

That dynamic could be one of the challenges with the SAFE-T Act, which has

Thou shalt not carjack a priest: Teen gets four years for Holy Name hijacking attempt

BY CWBCHICAGO

A man who was on parole for armed robbery when he tried to carjack a priest outside Holy Name Cathedral, sparking a struggle inside the priest's SUV in front of the seat of the Archdiocese of Chicago, has been sentenced to four years in prison. Judge Michael Hood handed down the sentence to Raleigh Ford, 18, on June 22.

Ford was on parole for an armed robbery conviction when he targeted the priest on May 21, 2025, outside the landmark church at 730 N. Wabash Ave. According to prosecutors, the priest had driven to the cathedral to check the mail and have lunch with a group of nuns. He parked his 2015 Toyota RAV4 in front of the church, leaving it unlocked with the keys in the ignition.

When he returned, the priest allegedly found Ford examining the SUV before climbing into the driver's seat. The priest entered through the passenger door, leading to a brief struggle inside the vehicle. Prosecutors said Ford punched the priest and tried to force him from the SUV. But the priest managed to pull the keys from the ignition, preventing Ford from driving away. Ford then ran from the scene.

The entire encounter was captured by cathedral surveillance cameras and three Chicago police officers who had previously arrested Ford recognized him from the footage, prosecutors said.

Five days later, Ford was arrested again after allegedly being found inside a 2011 Porsche Cayenne in the 1000 block of N. Clark St. Prosecutors said the vehicle's owner spotted Ford in the SUV and confronted him. Ford fled on foot but was located by responding officers a short distance away.

Ford's juvenile record includes three adjudications: an armed robbery case from 2024, for which he had been paroled just two days before the cathedral incident, and two stolen motor vehicle cases.

Under Illinois law, Ford will be required to serve 50% of his prison sentence. He will also receive credit for 483 days already spent in custody, making him eligible for release in a little more than eight months.

vision of the nation's essayists, poets and writers, like the Adams boys and James Monroe. They fought using the printing press as a power-weapon for encouraging republican values and national independence. America's intellects were polished and fine-tuned, and our God-given right to free speech meant we all could hear and learn from our best and brightest.

And we learned acceptance of allowing for speech, even that which we may detest or disagree with.

Reason refined the process making liberty real over the next two and a half centuries of the Republic's failures and successes. Expanding from 13 states to 50, America enhanced the liberty of the world in its experiment with democracy and our Democratic Republic. From the defense of old Europe, twice, to guarding its freedom and dignity in the present, to welcoming the people of the world to our shores, measures the success of the experiment to date.

Keeping open that door is vital for everyone's liberty, as the poet Emma Lazarus writes, for "huddled masses yearning to be free." It's Emma's last four words that are most important. The essential unbroken thread to our success. HAPPY BIRTHDAY AMERICA.

Cranes for Peace Project

A new project has been launched by the Japanese Culture Center and the Osaka Committee of Chicago Sister Cities International, and the Japanese American Service Committee that is seeking volunteer paper-folders.

They have established a goal to fold over 1,000 origami cranes to contribute to this collaborative art project—and they're calling on the community to help out.

Folders can participate by folding cranes at home (please leave wings up and unfolded for storage), by joining upcoming folding workshops at JASC, 5700 N. Clark St., where guests will be provide the origami paper and guidance.

Those who plan to drop off folded cranes should contact Ruby at rgrillier@jasc-chicago.org, and they'll make sure they are transported to the Japanese Culture Center.

(L) Peter Schivarelli at Notre Dame, and today (R). (Center) This summer, the band Chicago will return with a live performance in Rosemont.

Chicago: The man behind the band is Peter Schivarelli

BY MELODY BROMMA

In memory of Walter Parazaider 1945- 2026

“Does Anybody Really Know What Time It Is?” The answer, as it turns out, begins in 1959.

On a quiet Sunday morning, 10-year-old Peter Schivarelli was walking his grandmother to church bingo when he noticed another boy his age doing the same thing.

Who was the boy? Walter Parazaider.

Parazaider, founding saxophonist and woodwind player for the band Chicago, died at age 81 on June 17. He passed away in hospice care from complications of Alzheimer’s disease, which he had been battling for six years.

But back when he and Schivarelli were kids, neither youngster could have imagined that their chance meeting would blossom into a lifelong friendship and eventually help shape one of America’s most enduring rock bands.

Years later, Schivarelli watched as Parazaider and his new band lit up Chicago clubs such as Schuba’s and Barnaby’s with a sound unlike anything the city had heard before. A bold fusion of rock, jazz and a powerhouse three-piece horn section, the music was unmistakably Chicago.

Schivarelli was captivated—and before long, his own life would become intertwined with the band’s remarkable journey.

This reporter recently sat down with Schivarelli for a behind-the-scenes conversation about the group that has become one of the most successful touring bands in music history. With more than 100 million records sold, and Top 40 hits spanning six consecutive decades, Chicago has earned a permanent place in the soundtrack of American life.

Schivarelli’s own path was anything but conventional.

After high school, he was accepted by several colleges, but only one mattered. His dream was to attend the Univ. of Notre Dame and play football for the Fighting Irish. Rather than settle, he waited until he earned a scholarship, eventually arriving on the Notre Dame campus in his early 20s.

Later, he opened the iconic Demon Dogs restaurant under the ‘L’ tracks near DePaul Univ., a Chicago institution that became a favorite gathering place for students, politicians, celebrities and musicians alike. Tucked away in a small office behind the restaurant, Schivarelli balanced his business interests with public service. From 1971 through 2003, he served as Superintendent of Chicago’s 43rd Ward, devoting more than three decades to neighborhood improvement while quietly becoming one of the city’s most respected civic leaders.

Ironically, managing a rock band had never entered his plans.

“When I was a senior at Notre Dame,”

Schivarelli recalled with a laugh, “a counselor told me to make a list of every job I thought I’d ever want. I called it my ‘List of 1,000 Jobs.’ The only thing that wasn’t on the list was the music business.”

Life, however, had other ideas.

In its earliest days, Chicago was known simply as The Big Thing. First came Walter Parazaider, followed by keyboardist and songwriter Robert Lamm, and the pieces gradually fell into place. The group relocated to Los Angeles, where legendary manager Howard Kaufman recognized their enormous potential.

Former Mayor Daley is also part of the Chicago story, since he ordered the band to change its name from Chicago Transit Authority. A gift for the band, as the name and logo have become as recognizable as the skyline.

Schivarelli remained close to the band as its career exploded.

He recalls Chicago opening for Jimi Hendrix during a summer tour before attracting the attention of Janis Joplin, who invited them to join her tour. Success came quickly, and before long Chicago needed an opening act of its own.

One of those opening acts happened to be an ambitious young rocker named Bruce Springsteen. After only a handful of performances, Springsteen decided he was ready to headline on his own and marched off into rock history.

Although Schivarelli studied piano for several years as a child, he insists those lessons did nothing to prepare him for the music business. Instead, his greatest contribution has been leadership built on trust.

He gives the musicians complete artistic freedom, allowing them to vote on major decisions while he focuses on protecting the band’s future.

Since 1967, there has never been a year when Chicago has not toured. Few American bands can claim such legendary longevity while maintaining the loyalty of generations of fans. Rock N Roll Hall of Famers and inductees in The Songwriters Hall of Fame are among their accolades.

More than six decades after two boys unknowingly crossed paths, Schivarelli remains the steady hand behind one of rock’s greatest success stories. For millions of fans around the world, he has truly been “You’re the Inspiration.”

For Chicago, it is still “Only the Beginning.” Their charitable efforts are off the charts (so to speak): The Shriner’s Chicago Hospital; I Heart Radio the largest network in the world helping musicians with long-term care needs; and Chicago Paws. Never forgetting his Notre Dame roots, a charity called “Defeat DIPG Foundation” that battles brain cancer ranks high on the list of recipients. Five-year-old Chad Carr died from it and his big brother, C.J. Carr, (who is a Heisman Trophy contender this year) began the Foundation.

This summer, Chicago returns to Rosemont, once again inviting audiences to spend “Saturday in the Park” with one of America’s most beloved bands. For Schivarelli, whose journey began with a childhood friendship on a walk to church, it represents yet another chapter in a story that has become as much a part of Chicago’s history as the city itself.

To see the All-American band, Chicago, Saturday, Aug. 1 at Rosemont, go to Ticketmaster.com.

Grant Park cross-burner, charged with anti-Christian and anti-Black hate crimes, took time to smoke a cigarette at fire scene

When Merlin Lu burned a cross in Grant Park in June, prosecutors charged him with two hate crimes. Now, court records reveal who, exactly, he is accused of targeting: Black people and Christians. The details emerged from court filings and police reports that became available after Lu's initial court appearance.

Lu, 21, faces two counts of hate crime, along with arson and other charges, for the June 9 incident near Columbus Dr. in Grant Park. While public discussion initially focused on the cross-burning's historical association with racial intimidation, court records show prosecutors are also treating the act as a religion-based hate crime because it involved burning a cross, the central symbol of Christianity.

According to court filings, Lu told investigators he built the cross to protest what he described as "MAGA Christian nationalists" who support President Donald Trump. He said he bought blocks of wood, nails, a hammer, and kerosene at a Home Depot on two separate trips over the course of a month, then hauled everything more than a mile from his Near West Side apartment to the park — a location he chose, he allegedly told police, because it was downtown and people would see it. That part of his plan worked flawlessly, as a passerby captured the burning cross on video, and it quickly spread online.

Once in the park, Lu allegedly told detectives, he assembled the cross, wrapped it in toilet paper, tied a red MAGA-style cap to the top, dumped a gallon of kerosene on it, and set it on fire. Although, he did take a break during the cross construction phase to smoke a cigarette. According to court filings, he told detectives he learned how to start the fire by watching YouTube.

Lu, who told detectives he studied chemistry, said he merged the cross and the red hat in his message because he associated them with MAGA Christian nationalism, officials said. He told investigators he held no grievances against Christians broadly, only those who want to impose Christianity on the entire country, detectives noted. But prosecutors argue that burning a cross in a public park with the mindset Lu described suggests an anti-Christian message was intended.

On the race-based count, Lu has been consistent: he says he had no idea cross burnings carried racial significance or were used by the Ku Klux Klan to terrorize Black people. He told NBC5's Chuck Goudie before his arrest that he later learned about the history by reading a Wikipedia page. After that interview aired, the Univ. of Illinois Chicago told a WGN reporter that Lu "has not been enrolled with the university since the fall of 2025" — undercutting his claim to be a UIC senior.

Police identified him through Illinois Secretary of State facial recognition software, which matched a photo of the man fleeing the scene to Lu's driver's license photo. Detectives traced a kerosene bottle cap recovplaced significant authority in the hands of judges.

"In most of the cases where Republicans have complained about the SAFE-T Act," Gov. JB Pritzker said last week, "it's actually been the bad decision by an elected judge in Illinois, or no hearing at all because the prosecutor didn't bring it to the judge, and that has been a reason why somebody gets let out."

ered near the cross to a specific Home Depot, where employees identified it by product number and confirmed Lu bought kerosene and a lighter there on May 31. Surveillance video and a receipt backed up the purchase. After being read his Miranda rights, Lu admitted to buying the materials, building the cross, and burning it. He also identified himself in store and park surveillance stills.

When detectives interviewed Lu after his arrest, he repeatedly directed them to his NBC5 interview, telling them it was "very clear about his reason and motivation." He also told investigators he reached out to NBC5 in the first place because people were misreading his message as anti-Black and he wanted to correct the record. He had tried posting clarifications to TikTok and YouTube first, then took those down and agreed to the on-camera interview instead.

The viral video scene, with flames climbing into a tree's upper branches, brought a swift response from officials. Gov. JB Pritzker condemned the burning on social media the day after it occurred, writing that the symbol "has one purpose: to stir up intimidation and terror." Mayor Brandon Johnson called the impact "devastating." But after Lu's stated motivations became public, state Rep. Chris Miller said Pritzker owed the public an updated response, arguing the governor

A spokesperson for Burke's office said her administration has been focusing detention efforts in First Appearance Court, where defendants are brought immediately after arrest.

Prosecutors there requested detention in 12,702 cases over the past calendar year, with judges granting 67% of those requests, the spokesperson said. That compares with 7,575 detention requests and a 63% success rate during the first 14 months of had jumped ahead of the facts. "I look forward to J.B. Pritzker holding Merlin Lu accountable for MAGA hate because MAGA hate shouldn't have a home here in Illinois, right?" Miller said. Pritzker's office did not respond to questions about whether his position had changed.

At the June 18 detention hearing, prosecutors asked Judge D'Anthony Thedford to detain Lu pending trial. Thedford refused and also declined to impose electronic monitoring. He did order Lu, however, not to buy materials that could be used to start a fire, such as wood or kerosene.

Lu told investigators he built the cross to protest what he described as "MAGA Christian nationalist supporters" of President Donald Trump.

Gunman shoots man in parked car in West Rogers Park, may have targeted others in the area

A man was wounded in a shooting while sitting in his parked car in West Rogers Park June 28, and police are investigating whether the gunman also fired at another nearby vehicle moments later.

CPD said the 30-year-old victim was sitting in a parked vehicle in the 3000 block of W. North Shore Ave. around 1:24 a.m. when a man approached him. The two got into a "verbal altercation" before the offender pulled out a handgun and fired, striking the NetChoice added: "We understand the difficult fiscal environment Illinois faces and respect the legislature's effort to address it. But these two provisions will not solve it. They will generate lawsuits, compliance costs, reduced services and reputational damage that far exceed any revenue gained."

Gov. Pritzker signed the measure into law.

cashless bail under former State's Attorney Kim Foxx.

A former prosecutor who reviewed those figures said the numbers raised more questions than they answered.

"There are more than 4,000 cases where a judge has denied a motion for detention," the former prosecutor notes. "And yet, they did not appeal a single one? That seems extraordinary to me."

victim twice in the arm, according to a CPD media statement. Paramedics took the man to St. Francis Hospital, where he was listed in fair condition.

The gunman fled westbound on foot. He was described as a clean-shaven Hispanic man, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing about 180 lbs, and wearing a gray shirt.

Officers also responded to a couple of other gun-related incidents in the immediate area around the same time that may be connected. In one case, a 911 caller reported seeing a Hispanic man with curly hair carrying a gun while standing near a woman. When the caller asked what he was doing, the gunman allegedly warned the caller to leave before he started shooting.

In another incident, a man told officers he was sitting in his vehicle when a Hispanic man walked past, fired four shots at his car, and ran away. The driver was not injured, but bullets struck his vehicle, including one that shattered a window, according to a preliminary report.

CPD has not publicly linked the incidents or announced a motive. Detectives are continuing to investigate.

COOK COUNTY REAL PROPERTY ASSESSMENTS FOR 2026

This publication constitutes official notice of the changes in assessment to all owners of real property in Rogers Park Township. The 2026 assessment changes as published herein are those determined by the Assessor of Cook County.

It is the duty of the Assessor to appraise all taxable real property in Cook County at its fair cash value as of January 1, 2026. Fair cash value is described as what the property would bring at a voluntary sale in the normal course of business or trade. The Assessor is required by law to assess said property in a fair and just manner.

The Assessor does not determine property taxes. Property taxes are determined by the spending needs and requests of municipalities, school boards, park districts and other local government agencies which provide public services to property owners. The Assessor's sole responsibility is to estimate the value of real estate property.

In Cook County, real property is classified according to its use. The classification system is used to determine the percentage of the fair cash value at which the real property is assessed for purposes of taxation. Accordingly, real property is assessed at only a fraction of its fair cash value, depending on its use and classification.

Changes in assessment for land and improvements are listed separately. The dimensions of the land are also listed:

- A - Acres
- B - Back Lot
- N - Irregular Lot
- S - Square Feet

Cook County uses a Permanent Index Number (P.I.N) system as a means to identify individual real estate parcels. The PIN consists of a 14-digit number. The first two digits identify the area or survey township; the second two digits identify the sub-area or section; the next three digits identify blocks.

Note:

Blocks are defined as follows:

- Blocks 100 to 199 are located in the N.W. Quarter
- Blocks 200 to 299 are located in the N.E. Quarter
- Blocks 300 to 399 are located in the S.W. Quarter
- Blocks 400 to 499 are located in the S.E. Quarter

The next three digits in the series identify the specific parcel or lot. The last four, (where applicable), identify individual condominium units, non-operating railroad parcels or leasehold's of exempt parcels.

Whenever possible, the assessment list will be listed by the street name and the street or house number of the parcel. However, the Cook County Assessor's Office official records rely on permanent Property Index Numbers (P.I.N.) only. No assessment of real property shall be considered invalid due to an incorrect listing.

If you have any questions regarding the assessment of real property you should visit the Office of the Assessor of Cook County, 118 N. Clark Street, Room 301, Chicago, Illinois 60602, or call (312) 443-7550.

New exhibit hosts reading of Declaration of Independence

Declarations: 250 years of writing toward Independence on display through Sept. 7

A new exhibit in town features an 1823 print of the Declaration alongside works by Frederick Douglass, Abraham Lincoln, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Harvey Milk, The International Indian Treaty Council, and Martin Luther King Jr.

As the first and only U.S. museum dedicated to the history and impact of American writers, the American Writers Museum [AWM] engages with themes of independence and freedom throughout its permanent exhibits, spanning more than 400 years of American writing.

This summer, AWM is offering a special exhibit and Get Lit happy hour event celebrating the 250th anniversary of the signing of the U.S. Declaration of Independence. The happy hour event Get Lit: The Great American Heist starts at 5 p.m. Wednesday, July 8 includes reading of the Declaration as part of their Sharing the Spirit of America national program.

The exhibit is open now through Monday, Sept. 7, at 180 N. Michigan Ave., 2nd Floor. Visitors can explore an 1823 William Stone print of the Declaration of Independence, as commissioned by then Secretary of State John Quincy Adams, as well as colonial-era legal documents signed by John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, Philip Livingston and Roger Sherman.

At an interactive erasure poetry station, guests can edit the founding document into their own words, inspired by an erasure poem from Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Tracy K. Smith.

The exhibit also offers visitors the opportunity to read and reflect on works by writers throughout American history that reference the themes and promise of the Declaration, including:

- Elizabeth Cady Stanton's (1815-1902) Declaration of Sentiments (1848)
- Frederick Douglass's (1818-

1895) What to the Slave Is the Fourth of July? (1852)

- Abraham Lincoln's (1809-1865) The Gettysburg Address (1863)
- Martin Luther King, Jr.'s (1929-1968) I Have A Dream speech (1963)
- The International Indian Treaty Council's (1974-present) Declaration of Continuing Independence (1974)

"The United States was a country founded on the written word. How those words spread—how they impacted history and the world—is the essence of what the museum is about: the power of writers to shape the world, to influence our history, our culture and our daily lives. We are excited to explore those ideas this year and every year," says AWM President Carey Cranston.

Tickets are $16 in person and $14 if purchased in advance online. For more information, visit americanwritersmuseum.org/america250.

The Get Lit happy hour series is for visitors 21+ to join their fellow "investigators" to find a special artifact that has been stolen from the pop-up Declarations exhibit, while enjoying cocktail, costumes are encouraged.

door. While officers were on the scene, Krichilsky reportedly told the cops he was "trying to fix their air conditioning."

Police arrested him, and a search allegedly revealed Krichilsky was carrying $843 in cash, 14 credit, debit, and gift cards, a check, two driver's licenses bearing different names, a laptop, and two counterfeit U.S. Postal Service master keys, according to court filings.

But in May 2023, a month after the latest round of burglaries allegedly began, prosecutors allowed Krichilsky to plead the Lincoln Park case down to a misdemeanor trespassing charge.

Judge Timothy Joyce sentenced him to two years' probation, but court records show a probation violation warrant has been out for Krichilsky's arrest since Oct. 2024. Krichilsky is once again free, awaiting trial.

Court records show Krichilsky's previous Cook County convictions include manufacture or delivery of heroin in 2017, for which he received probation; felony theft of between $100,000 and $500,000 in 2018, which also resulted in probation; and two burglary convictions in 2021 that resulted in a three-year prison sentence, most of which was satisfied through time spent on electronic monitoring.

The ministry operates almost entirely through donations and volunteers. Kohlbeck said men's clothing is consistently the greatest need, along with luggage, bicycles, baby supplies, toiletries, towels and bedding.

She is also encouraging the public to share possible locations and volunteer assistance. "No idea is a dumb idea," Kohlbeck said. "We want to hear of any opportunity."

In addition to donated space, the organization is seeking grant-writing assistance, Spanish-speaking volunteers and financial support to help cover future rent and utilities.

Kohlbeck said the ministry hopes it can continue serving the community without interruption. "Everyone in the group really feels that we have more work to do," she said. "I believe it would be a real shame if we shut our doors on Aug. 31 and we're not able to open them someplace else."

Kohlbeck said she hopes readers will consider supporting the ministry by donating items, volunteering their time or helping identify a new space. She encouraged anyone with leads on available storefronts, church space or other locations in the Near North area to reach out, as well as those who can assist with grant writing or translation services. Donations of clothing, household goods and financial contributions are also needed to sustain operations as the organization prepares for a potential move.

For more information, or to share potential locations for the organization, contact Kohlbeck at 920-254-4735 or Cathy Schilling at 773-501-8027. Information can also be requested by email at cathy.schilling@rcn.com.

St. Chrys' Closet is open to the public on Wednesdays. The ministry is accepting donations of seasonally appropriate clothing, especially men's clothing, along with luggage, bicycles, baby items, toiletries, towels and bedding.

grabbed the money and sprinted from the bank, beginning a getaway that quickly unraveled.

As he ran through a nearby alley, he removed his mask, gloves, hat, and jacket and stuffed them into the Potbelly's bag, prosecutors said. In the process, some of the stolen money spilled onto the ground. Surveillance cameras captured Marshall stopping to retrieve the dropped cash before continuing his sprint toward the CTA.

Meanwhile, Chicago police surveillance officers were already sifting through the city's vast network of transit security cameras in search of the robber.

Solomon Marshall

It didn't take long for them to find Marshall. Police watched as Marshall jumped a turnstile at the Washington-Wells station and boarded a Brown Line train. Camera operators kept an eye on him as he transferred to a Blue Line train at the Clark-Lake station near the Thompson Center. Using real-time CTA camera feeds, police continued monitoring Marshall's movements as he headed west.

Officers eventually intercepted him at the Illinois Medical District Blue Line station, where he was still carrying the Potbelly's bag with $776 stuffed inside, along with the clothing he had discarded during his flight, prosecutors said.

Marshall pleaded not guilty and took the case to trial in October, but his defense attorney argued that Marshall did not dispute taking the money. Rather, he challenged whether his conduct met the federal definition of bank robbery "by intimidation." The defense maintained that the case presented a legal question regarding the nature of the note rather than a dispute over responsibility for the crime itself. The jury convicted him.

Federal prosecutors sought a sentence of 41 months, the low end of the applicable guideline range, while the defense asked for 27 months, citing Marshall's lack of prior convictions.

On Friday, U.S. District Judge John Blakey sentenced Marshall to 40 months in prison and ordered him to pay $776 in restitution, according to court records.

Marshall's legal problems aren't over. Court records show he also faces active detainers and pending criminal cases in Indiana, Wisconsin, Colorado, and Ohio. He is additionally wanted in DuPage County on an aggravated robbery warrant.
