Rare post-Chicago Fire building on E. Oak St. unceremoniously demolished

Demo for expansion of jewelry store

BY PETER VON BUOL

A three-story red brick building constructed as a residence in the years following the Chicago Fire of 1871 at 107 E. Oak St. was recently demolished after the Chicago Plan Commission had approved its demolition.

Recognized by the City of Chicago's [Architectural] Historic Resources Survey of 1985, its facade had been slightly altered from the time of its original construction and therefore had been given a Green rating. The Plan Commission had approved its demolition to allow the site to be incorporated into the adjacent Razny Jewelry store at 109 E. Oak St.

Despite its historical relevance, the city's Plan Commission and the Oak St. Council had approved the demolition due to the sales taxes projected to be generated by the site. The Oak St. Council is the sole service provider for Oak Street Special Service Area 75 [Oak Street SSA] and shares its address with Razny.

Sheriff deputies to supplement CPD following gang shooting in River North

An increased deployment of Cook County Sheriff's deputies last weekend will maintain a permanent presence in River North following a brazen July 1 gang shooting that left one man dead and a bystander injured at 515 N. State.

An increased presence of Cook County Sheriff's deputies over the Independence Day weekend will continue going forward as part of a permanent, state-funded task force to protect mass transit in Chicago.

The initial surge followed a request by Ald. Brendan Reilly [42nd] for additional police resources downtown after a gang-related shooting in River North killed one man and injured a bystander.

On July 1, at 3:20 a.m., a gray Honda Accord pulled up to 515 N. State St. along Grand Ave. According to Reilly, five men wearing hoods and masks emerged from the vehicle armed with handguns and semi-automatic rifles. The gunmen fired into the office building's plaza for several seconds, striking a 30-year-old man on the far side of the courtyard and a 65-year-old man near a central bench. Witnesses reported that the rapid succession of gunfire initially sounded like holiday fireworks. The younger man suffered multiple gunshot wounds, including

A Chicago Police Dept. photographer documents the scene of a shooting outside 515 N. State St. on July 1. The incident, which occurred around 3:20 a.m., left a 30-year-old man dead and a 65-year-old man injured. Dozens of yellow evidence markers and a heavy police presence remained outside the office building following the shooting.

Culture is big business: Arts sector accounts for 16% of Loop jobs

Nearly one in six jobs in the Loop is supported by the creative industries, according to a new economic impact study detailing the financial footprint of downtown arts and culture.

Loop North News

Art and culture have been lucrative for downtown, pumping an estimated $14.3 billion into the local economy, according to a new study by research firm Sound Diplomacy and the Chicago Loop Alliance [CLA].

The creative sector supports

66,173 jobs, accounting for nearly 16% of all employment within the Loop. Local cultural operations contribute $11.4 billion in direct output, representing nearly a third (31.5%) of the entire creative economic output for Chicago.

"The creative sector represents an industry rich with exceptional supply chain benefits, and is a driving force in establishing the Loop as a multi-use district of business, hospitality, culture, residents, and retail that operates 24/7/365," said CLA President and CEO Dr. Suzet McKinney.

City neighborhood gentrification isn't always a dirty word

BY DON DEBAT
The Home Front

The slow-moving, on-going creep of gentrification in Chicago neighborhoods can be disruptive to some apartment renters who are being priced out of their long-term family digs.

Gentrification can be disruptive, but it is not always a dirty word. Real estate experts say the current problem of gentrification isn't severe enough to warrant radical remedies that would end up hurting the people the fixes are meant to help.

Affordable housing advocates complain that gentrification brings higher rents and rising property values. But that also is good news for the working-class homeowners, many of them minorities and seniors, who reside in appreciating areas.

Gentrification has benefited thousands of working-class families who literally rolled the dice. Following the advice of real estate mogul Arthur Rubloff: "Buy on the fringe and wait." They invested in dicey neighborhoods, put in the sweat equity to improve their properties, and now hope to bank loan-awaited financial gains.

In a nutshell, that's the "American Dream"—owning real estate and rising into the middle class of landlord, or the "landed gentry."

Historically, the beginning of the "gentry," or upper-middle class, dates back to the 13th century in Britain and Ireland, and grew with the rise of feudalism. The landed gentry (a.k.a. landlords) generally were educated people of noble birth who lived off of the rental income of their lands.

That history lesson is worth remembering as Chicago looks at what currently is happening today in the neighborhoods of Jackson Park, Woodlawn and South Shore.

Following the recent opening of the Obama Presidential Center, out-of-town apartment investors suddenly are infatuated with Jackson Park and other nearby South Side lakefront neighborhoods. The Center is a major Jackson Park tourist attraction, along with the Museum of Science and Industry.

However, the threat of rising apartment rents in "Obamaville" is sparking a battle between tenants and landlords.

A new city anti-gentrification ordinance that gives tenants the "right-of-first-refusal" to buy their building in certain South Side neighborhoods took effect in April, 2026.

That action has rattled apartment investors and realty industry insiders. The new "Jackson Park

Building a house for democracy, one that still holds our imagination

By Thomas J. O'Gorman

There was no blueprint or roadmap, and no competent plan more than 250 years ago to break away from a feudal system of life under despots. But in seeking freedom of a new land, ocean-going pilgrims and settlers discovered they could thrive away from European kings and country.

America of that era catalogued physically a unique passage to a government of liberty and personal freedom in the form of a building. One that has demonstrated the long reach of sacrifice and complex challenge. A building that still holds our imagination.

In the Treaty of Paris signed on Sept. 3, 1783, the British officially recognized American independence. George Washington disbanded the army and returned to his plantation to breathe.

But colonists were possessed of great luck, also wide vision and powerful unity. Yet Washington still warned us to “Guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism.”

Behaviors often unknown to the hardened British military. The grit and commitment of the American colonists were no match for the often lackluster weakness of the British.

As rebellion raged the colonists were nation-building. Resolute in its dynamic spirit.

No part of our two-and-a-half century history stands bolder than the plan to build a residence to house both our Chief Executive, the president, and serve as the center of our government’s Executive branch. Yes, we’re referring to the White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

It’s a fabled residence designed by an Irishman, James Hoban, architect of the famed Rossenarra House in Kilkenny.

The White House was commissioned by Washington, himself, who selected the site for the building.

This would not be a Doge’s Palace, Palace of Versailles or Winter Palace in St. Petersburg. The White House was to be intentionally understated, compared to grand European palaces, to reflect American republican values. Modeled in the Neoclassical style, its design avoids ostentatious royal extravagance to symbolize that the president is a public servant rather than a monarch.

Construction began by 1792, the year the cornerstone was laid. And construction has not stopped since. Even now with a new ballroom being erected over a new underground Situation Room.

Back in Washington’s day, the project was envisioned and designed with no temporary ‘wrestling ring’ on the grounds. Concern back then was for adequate space and accommodation for the daily details of administering our Republic.

The nation’s new leader was “president.” A fresh untested post shaped with confidence and governmental pride, ensuring a refined simplicity rather than the ermine-robed monarchs in Europe.

Washington’s military sensitivities were without extravagance. His embrace of American objectives necessitated reasoned initiatives as well as a harmony of intellect for which a Revolution had been fought. He knew that “Liberty, when it begins to take root, is a plant of rapid growth.”

America’s self understanding would visibly demonstrate simple but inventive ways of conducting government.

The location of the new White House, in what later became Washington D. C., was set on the swampy landscape of old Virginia. That appeared to be a wise decision. No more nostalgia of awkward old alliance or stale European sentimentality. It was a new American settlement offering fresh political opportunity for independent growth, free from the details of past histories. A blank slate.

New York and Philadelphia each had served as the nation’s first two capitals. New York from 1785 to 1790 after the Constitution was ratified and then Philadelphia. Washington took the oath of office in New York, inaugurated as first president. The government sat in what was known as Federal Hall, the birthplace place of American government.

By 1790 congress had passed the Residence Act establishing a new national capital to be established at a site along the Potomac River. Land personally selected by Washington, later to become Washington D.C. But it would take a decade for it to be accomplished.

In the meantime, Philadelphia served temporarily as the nation’s second capital.

Congress Hall served as the meeting place for the U.S. Congress from 1790 to 1800.

Architect Hoban spent the better part of the decade building the home for its executive leader, fashioning a suitable workplace for the task ahead in building the greatest nation on Earth.

Washington, took the oath of office on the balcony of Federal Hall in New York in 1789. There he established the early workings of the federal government. He also established the first presidential cabinet.

The details surrounding Washington were thick with concerns and motivation. He had to invent the American presidency, saying “Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair; the rest is in the hands of God.”

As things progressed Washington and his wife, Martha, would occupy a series of grand houses where the president would conduct meetings with Congressmen, foreign diplomats, and foreign dignitaries. He went on to establish his Cabinet of advisors.

The president also signed onto the first copyright law. He set precedent for the social life of the president. He issued the first Thanksgiving proclamation by a U.S. president. He personally led troops into the field to stop the Whiskey Rebellion.

Washington used just two presidential vetoes during his time in office. His famous letter on religious liberty was addressed to the Hebrew Congregation in Newport, Rhode Island (home to the Touro Synagogue). And his celebrated Farewell Address, was as a valedictory to “friends and fellow citizens” after 20 years of public service to the United States. It was epic.

The three pillars of that address were the danger of political parties, a caution against entangling foreign alliances, and urging citizens to prioritize geographic sectionalism in their national identity over their regional or local interests. He warned that viewing the country through a regional lens (such as the North vs. the South) would weaken the Union and threaten the liberty and prosperity of the entire United States.

In addition, Washington engaged the life of the nation in key legislation. With the Judiciary Act of 1789 he established the Supreme Court. With the Naturalization Act of 1790, he established rules in granting citizenship. Immigration and customs laws were some of the very first laws written in this new nation.

The Residence Act of 1790 established a national capital, the Copyright Act of 1790 encouraged learning by granting U.S. citizens exclusive rights to print and publish books, maps, and charts, the Bank Act 1791 created the first bank, as well as acts establishing the military and the use of coins.

Father of our country indeed. Washington’s hands rocked the cradle.

The American president guided the construction of the White House, though he’s the only one never to reside there.

We are still building our nation.

America’s leadership then and now have rolled up their sleeves to the task of inventing and reinventing our democracy, shaping the organization and system of Republican rule.

America owes a great debt of gratitude to Washington, 250 years after his best works, as he laid the foundations for much of what we value most today. From sea to shining sea.

BUSTED: Mayor Brandon Johnson’s administration released an audit showing the city ending 2025 with a negative $52 million balance, reports the Sun-Time’s Fran Spielman. Now we know why so many city projects saw work stoppages late last year and early in 2026. Mayor Johnson, who ran for office with $6,000 in past due water bills, could not pay the city’s bills.

HOT DOG: Matt Brewer, co-owner of The Wiener’s Circle in Lincoln Park, has officially entered the 2027 race for Chicago Mayor. He declared his candidacy—taking aim at the current administration’s dysfunction. Mayor Johnson probably puts ketchup on his hot dog.

CHICAGO PLACE MALL: Wow. Really creepy. Chicago Place Mall at 700 N. Michigan Ave. between Huron and Superior was only open for 19 years before it closed. Some great places there, but couldn’t face the neighborhood competition, the pandemic lockdown, the riots and looting, and ongoing crime that chased people out of the Loop. So now it’s empty and abandoned. Is this a growing national trend? In Chicago, we’re afraid “yes” it is.

Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act” requires neighborhood landlords to notify tenants when they plan to sell an apartment building and wait 180 days for tenants to make an offer on the property, if they choose to do so. Proponents say the ordinance will slow displacement of residents along the South Side lakefront.

Opponents of the ordinance argue the process is unnecessary because tenants have the right to buy a building without the waiting period, and it only delays sales and gives both lenders and buyers cold feet.

Mayor Richard J. Daley 1975.

Additionally, the ordinance breaches the basic “principle of uniformity” creating a two-tier class of property owner’s rights, said Sara Benson, a veteran appraiser and president of Benson Stanley Realty. “The legislation further diminishes an owner’s bundle of rights by encumbering the right-to-transfer the real estate—as compared with property owners outside the affected district.”

Last week, Mayor Brandon Johnson introduced his “Protecting Renters Ordinance” [PRO], which seeks an overhaul of Chicago’s 40-year-old Residential Landlord and Tenant Ordinance [RLTO].

Currently, the Chicago Assn. of Realtors’ standard 37-page apartment lease is loaded with renter protection. The 2026 lease also includes four pages to protect tenants from domestic violence and abuse.

The proposed ordinance is receiving heavy opposition from the Neighborhood Building Owner’s Alliance [NBOA], a non-profit group of major apartment managers, owners and investors. Here are the restrictions that would be added to the already weighty RLTO, as a further expansion of government into private transactions:

- A ban on hidden, or so-called “junk fees,” such as application and processing fees.
- A requirement that any amounts charged to renters in addition to monthly rent, and or security deposits, reflect actual, documented costs.
- Creation of a “Tenant Bill of Rights” and the requirement that landlords disclose if they’re using algorithmic pricing tools that are popular in the hotel industry.
- The proposed ordinance also would establish a “rental-registry fee” and create a new administrative body to resolve renter-landlords disputes.

Some landlords say the rental registry essentially would be a “hit list” that would create another layer of taxes on top of property taxes, which are the wildfire driving rent increases.

Owner-occupied, “Ma-and-Pa” two-unit to six-unit buildings and nonprofit affordable housing would be exempt from the registry fee. Larger building owners would be charged a fee of $20 to $60 per unit.

For both big corporate rental-apartment operators and Ma-and-Pa owners, the assassin in the room is soaring property taxes caused by exorbitant governmental spending in Chicago and Cook County. However, the Mayor doesn’t mention that issue.

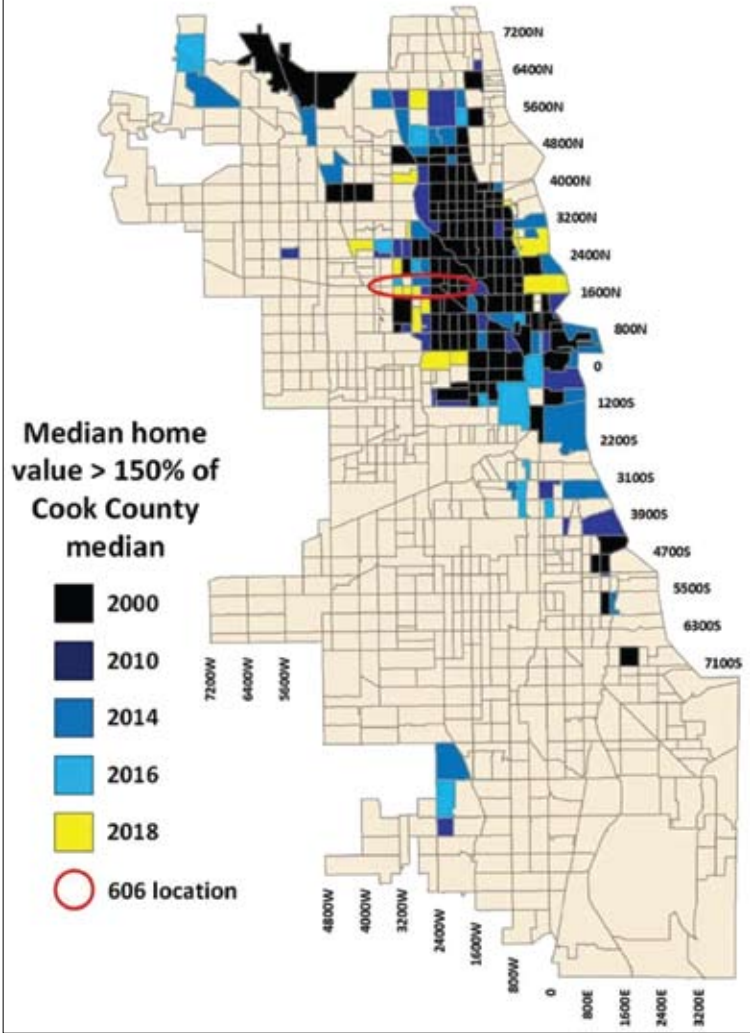

Chicago gentrification history

The negative concept of “gentrification” was developed in the 1960s and 1970s by extreme leftwing liberals following the passage of the 1968 Civil Rights Act. In 1974, Congress passed the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, which gave women enhanced property ownership rights.

Urbanologists note that gentrification also is synonymous with investment that sparked the rebirth of Chicago neighborhoods in the 1970s. Few people today recall that much of Lincoln Park was blighted in the 1960s and

INSIDE PUBLICATIONS

70s. Gentrification fixed that.

Neighborhood disinvestment began in the 1950s and culminated with the riots following the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King in 1968. Unscrupulous lenders red-lined neighborhoods, and shady realty agents swept in, sparking “block-busting” and “panic peddling” mostly on the South and West sides.

As Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist Mike Royko reported in “Boss,” his best-selling book on Mayor Richard J. Daley, prior to the 1960s, Chicago was a sea of ethnic neighborhoods. “To the Southwest was Ireland, to the West was Poland and Little Italy, to the North was Germany,” Royko explained.

With an Irish Democrat John F. Kennedy in the White House in 1960, powerful Mayor Daley sought and received millions of dollars in federal Urban Renewal funds to speed the rebirth of Chicago.

Mayor Daley pushed to redevelop flophouses and cheap hotels on 1200 N. to 1500 N. Clark St. and along LaSalle St. on the Near North Side, and replaced the slums with the Rubloff developed, 1,700-unit Carl Sandburg Village, an apartment and townhome community.

Sandburg Village later became the largest condominium conversion in the nation’s history.

Mayor Daley then turned the Urban Renewal bulldozers on East Old Town and Lincoln Park, then low-rent artist and writer’s communities. More than 600 aging brick two-flats and frame homes were razed.

Mayor Brandon Johnson.

Mayor Daley’s big mistake was the creation of the infamous Cabrini Green public housing project on Chicago Ave. and Division St. just south of North Ave. His son, Mayor Richard M. Daley, eventually razed the projects. Many developers now view the site as the “West Gold Coast.”

In the mid-1950s, to create a buffer between the rising Cabrini Green, Mayor Richard J. Daley ordered the removal of an elevated street ramp that connected Ogden Ave. to Chicago and Milwaukee avenues and the Near West Side.

Once the ramp was dismantled, the broad four-lane Ogden boulevard was vacated for luxury Old Town townhomes and parks.

“It was a moment when Chicago believed growth and neighborhood stability could coexist,” recalled Old Town resident and urbanologist Timothy J. Carew. “In the 1970s, major high-rises rose simultaneously along North Ave., Wells St. and LaSalle.”

The high-rises were built under FHA Section 220 financing. Developer returns were capped, and Urban renewal land was publicly bid, Carew said. “Those projects created owners, equity and long-term stakeholders across Old Town,” Carew said. “Most of those buildings began as rentals and later converted to condominiums, giving thousands of Chicagoans a path from renter to owner.”

In the 1970s, the growth of Chicago Landmark Districts also led to gentrification. So did the conversion of industrial loft buildings and office high-rises to residential rentals and condos.

Today, gentrification isn’t about to engulf the city. Instead, it has been steady but slow. Typically, five to 10 census tracts gentrify annually. Chicago has about 800 census tracts. On average, fewer than 1% a year gentrify, according to a 2020 report by the Chicago Sun-Times.

These newly affluent areas aren’t randomly scattered. They’re mostly extensions of already established gentrified zones.

A detailed map, drafted by the Urban Displacement Project, shows six recently gentrified neighborhoods in East Humboldt Park and Wicker Park. Three of them are along the “606 Trail.” Median values in the six tracts ranging from $368,000 to $428,000. In one tract, home values almost doubled in just six years, from $188,000 in 2012 to $371,000 in 2018, according to

Affordable housing advocate Peter Holsten to retire

Selling a 17-building, 2,600-unit portfolio

Peter Holsten was investing in affordable housing before it was cool. He has spent his last 50 years in the industry proving you can do it right, and much of his work took place on Chicago's North Side.

Holsten is the founder of Holsten Real Estate Development Corp., and he just announced his plans to retire and sell off his firm and real estate holdings.

Holsten has just listed for sale a total of 17 buildings along with selling the firm and management arm that oversees the properties. They include two buildings in Wilson Yards in Uptown, 544 W. Oak St., 551 W. Elm St., The Lawson House former YMCA on Chicago Ave., North Town Village and Larrabee Place.

In total, the portfolio contains 2,638 apartment units, 758 of which are Chicago Housing Authority units. The sale will include commercial space, and totals over two million square feet. Holsten has reportedly developed over $500 million in mixed-income housing, commercial development and mixed-use housing across the city.

What is not a part of the sale is Holsten Human Capital Development [HHCD], a nonprofit aimed at at-risk populations that tries to expand critical resource access. HHCD will remain with the Holsten family, run by Peter's wife, Jackie, who will head up the operation.

The entire portfolio has been on the market for a month, and there has been no sales price announced.

Holsten started building his firm back in 1975 with a 16-unit building. His dream was to create value by nourishing tarnished properties and turning vacant land into housing and commercial space.

Today, they claim their enterprise is comprised of dynamic professionals knowledgeable in complex and specialized programs of affordable and low income tax credit housing programs, and the market rate segment.

Just last year Holsten secured one of the final pieces he needed for the redevelopment of the former Cabrini-Green public housing complex when he locked in $45 million in construction financing to finish the Parkside at Old Town plan with "Parkside 5," a 99-unit mixed-income development.

Gov. Pritzker visits Boystown pot shop, says new regulations on dope are 'long overdue'

BY BEN SZALINSKI
Capital News

A wide-ranging new state law on hemp and other pot regulations was "long overdue," said Gov. JB Pritzker July 2 at an event in Chicago to celebrate the new law he signed last month.

The Governor visited, delivered remarks and answered questions at the SWAY Cannabis Dispensary at 3340 N. Halsted St. in Boystown.

Senate Bill 3222 makes a variety of changes to the state's cannabis laws but chiefly introduces new regulations for intoxicating hemp products. It immediately bans the sale of the previously unregulated products such as Delta-8 to those under 21 and now regulates intoxicating hemp under the state's existing cannabis laws.

"While our regulated cannabis market has been operating under those strict standards, using a federal loophole, an entirely separate market emerged for intoxicating hemp products, creating real risks to the public, especially for our kids," Pritzker said. "Intoxicating hemp products have been sold over the counter without the safeguards consumers deserve, and until now without the protections needed to keep them out of the hands of young people."

Intoxicating hemp products now must be sold in child-proof packages. It also bans what supporters of regulation call misleading advertising and packaging that is designed to appeal to children, such as packaging the products in a way designed to look like common snacks.

"These are not harmless products, they carry real risks for young children and young people," said Dr. Mark Butterly, the chief medical officer at Advocate Aurora Children's Hospital. "These products can impair judg-

DUI driver was seen drinking over a 12-hour period, including while working as a bartender, before fatal Loop crash

A Chicago man is detained after prosecutors said surveillance video showed him consuming alcohol at various times over 12 hours, including during a shift he worked as a bartender, before getting behind the wheel while intoxicated and plowing into a disabled car on the Kennedy Expy., killing two people.

Isiah Olivas, 27, is accused of slamming his 2018 Jeep into the rear of a stalled Hyundai on southbound I-90 at Randolph St. at 1:46 a.m. March 15. Surveillance video allegedly showed him drinking throughout the 12 hours leading up to the crash, officials said, including while he was on the clock at a bar where he worked.

Four people were sitting in the Hyundai, which had become disabled and stopped in the left lane, according to the Illinois State Police. Rashad Dean, 31, and Nadinah Cummings, 23, who were both seated in the back seat, died. The driver, a 39-year-old woman, and a 25-year-old woman in the front passenger seat were both seriously injured.

Olivas was also hurt in the crash. Officials said his driving history includes two prior crashes with injuries, one in 2017 and the other in 2018.

Investigators spent months building evidence in the case. Olivas turned himself in this month. At a detention hearing, Judge Luciano Panici Jr. granted the state's petition to detain Olivas. He is charged with two counts each of aggravated DUI causing a fatal accident and aggravated DUI causing an accident with bodily harm.

Man charged with reckless driving after River North crash

Bradyn Jordan, 19, of Lake in the Hills, IL has been charged with multiple offenses for reckless driving after he was arrested on June 29, at 1:24 a.m., in the 800 block of N. Clark St.

Bradyn Jordan

Jordan was identified as the offender who, minutes earlier, was driving the wrong direction and collided with another vehicle in the 800 block of N. Clark St., which injured a 40-year-old male victim. Jordan attempted to flee the scene, but was placed into custody a short time later. He was subsequently charged accordingly.

Three accused of carrying loaded guns during post-Pride Parade street party

We've learned more details about the three people accused of possessing firearms during the post-Pride Parade festivities around Boystown June 28 and 29 — including the fact that police say one of the men was actually carrying two firearms. And, CPD reports show, all three of the accused men are from the suburbs.

Mugshots: (L-R) Jayron Cleveland, Jaydyn Green, and Derrick Woods.

Chicago police said 34 people, including five juveniles, were arrested during the event, most of them during the unsanctioned post-parade street party that has overtaken the neighborhood for roughly the past decade. Only six of the 34 people face felony charges, with the gun cases representing the most serious allegations.

Jayron Cleveland, 22, of Gary, IN, was arrested outside the Addison Red Line CTA station around 10:50 p.m., according to a CPD report. Officers stopped Cleveland for drinking suspected alcohol from a blue cup and noticed what they described as a "hard bulge" in the front of his waistband. When asked if he had any weapons, Cleveland admitted he was carrying a firearm and cops recovered a loaded .40-caliber pistol with an extended magazine and a laser attachment from his waistband, according to the report.

During a search of Cleveland's backpack, officers allegedly found a second fully loaded pistol with a laser attachment, a bottle of tequila, a bottle of Hennessy, about 3 ounces of marijuana, and 27 suspected ecstasy pills. Cleveland is charged with two counts of aggravated unlawful possession of a weapon and one count of possessing ecstasy. Prosecutors asked Judge Rivanda Doss Beal to detain him, but the judge denied the request, according to court records.

Jaydyn Green, 25, of Crete, was arrested shortly before 10 p.m. Sunday directly across the street from the Town Hall 19th District police station in the 800 block of W. Addison St., according to CPD records. Officers were "dispersing a large crowd of people jumping on CPD squad cars and playing loud music while blocking the street and sidewalk" when they noticed Green wearing a backpack with a "weighted L-shaped object consistent with a firearm," the report said.

Cops said they saw Green sit down and press his back against the door of a residence, a movement they interpreted as an attempt to conceal the object. As officers tried to move him away from the building entrance, one officer felt what was later determined to be a loaded handgun inside the backpack, the report said. Green allegedly told officers he had a concealed carry license, but police determined he possessed neither a concealed carry license nor a Firearm Owner's Identification card, according to the report.

Prosecutors did not seek Green's detention, so Judge James Murphy III released him to await trial and ordered him to surrender any firearms to police within 48 hours.

Derrick Woods, 33, of Richton Park, was arrested around 2:15 a.m. June 29 in the 3200 block of N. Broadway, CPD said. Officers responded to disperse "a large, unruly crowd consuming alcohol on the public way and actively fighting with the police," according to Woods' arrest report. An officer allegedly saw Woods walking on Broadway while drinking suspected alcohol from a cup and carrying a backpack that appeared "heavily weighted in a manner consistent with the weight and shape of a firearm."

Woods ran when he realized officers were trying to stop him, but he was quickly taken into custody, and police recovered a loaded .40-caliber pistol from his backpack, a CPD report said. Prosecutors asked Judge Doss Beal to detain Woods on a charge of being a felon in possession of a weapon. The judge declined to do so and released him pending trial.

A woman identified in a CPD report as Woods' girlfriend, 29-year-old Shaneka Campbell, is charged with aggravated battery for allegedly punching an officer in the face multiple times with both fists while the officer was attempting to arrest Woods.

It's worth noting that police responded to the "large, unruly crowd" nearly four hours after it had formed, blocking the street, obstructing traffic, and using the top of at least one CTA bus as a stage. It's unclear how the CPD managed to avoid seeing what was happening on one of the busiest streets in Lakeview East for so many hours.

He served time for a CTA hammer attack, now he's charged with another Red Line robbery

Curtis Tyler, inset, and surveillance images of the 2024 robbery suspect.

Nearly two years after a CTA passenger was robbed on the Red Line, a man is facing charges after another of his alleged victims had a chance encounter with him in Lakeview. Readers may remember Curtis Tyler, 34, because he was arrested in 2021 and ultimately convicted of attacking a Red Line passenger with a hammer, a crime police at the time suspected he had committed against other victims as well.

Around 6:45 a.m. on June 27, a 26-year-old man called 911 and reported that a man who had threatened to shoot him on the Red Line a week earlier was walking near the Belmont CTA station in Lakeview. He gave police a description of the suspect's clothing and waited for CPD to arrive.

Officers found Tyler getting into a car outside a Taco Bell at 920 W. Belmont Ave., matching the description, and asked if they could search him, a CPD report said. Tyler agreed, and police allege they found a gun-shaped cigarette lighter in his jacket pocket. The victim then identified Tyler as the person who had threatened him.

Chicago police coordinated with Skokie police, who had handled the original complaint on June 13. According to that report, the victim said he was riding the Red Line between the Argyle and Howard stops when another passenger, allegedly Tyler, manipulated the slide of a black firearm and made several threats while pointing it at him.

Tyler was charged with two misdemeanors in that case, neither of which is detainable under the SAFE-T Act. But he didn't go very far. CPD officers arrested him again at the courthouse to face charges in a CTA robbery from 2024.

In that case, a CPD report alleges that a 73-year-old man was on the platform at the Sox-35th station on Aug. 28, 2024, when he got into a verbal altercation with Tyler, who ultimately produced a handgun and punched and robbed the man. Police released surveillance images of the robbery suspect about a week later and asked the public for help identifying him. Judge Rivanda Doss Beal ordered Tyler detained on charges of robbery and aggravated battery of a transit passenger.

Tyler's arrest report also states he is suspected of robbing another victim at the Argyle Red Line station in Sept. 2024, allegedly taking the victim's wallet and chain and punching him in the face with the handle of a knife. He has not been charged in that incident.

Chicago police officers found Tyler at the Belmont CTA station in Lakeview a short time later and recognized him as matching the hammer attack suspect's description. Tyler allegedly told officers he "just got into it with someone on the train." Police say they found a hammer, a folding knife, and someone else's Ventra card in his possession.

In July 2022, Tyler received a four-year sentence for attacking a 50-year-old man with a hammer as they prepared to exit a train at the Clark-Division Red Line CTA station on Aug. 24, 2021. Prosecutors said Tyler mumbled as he stood next to the victim on the train, then suddenly struck him in the forehead with the hammer and ran from the station. Prosecutors also alleged Tyler was performing a sex act as he carried out the attack. The victim was taken to Northwestern Memorial Hospital, where doctors closed the wound on his head with four staples.

Prosecutors said police were investigating Tyler in connection with at least 11 similar attacks on the city's trains, buses, and L platforms. But he was never charged in any of those other incidents.

Tyler received a nine-year sentence for choking and robbing a victim at a CTA bus stop in 2012. In that case, he allegedly walked up to the victim, asked him for a cigarette, and then grabbed him by the throat and choked him when he refused, demanding the victim's belongings before taking his wallet. Tyler was also found guilty of aggravated battery causing great bodily harm in 2014 after attacking another victim at a CTA station. He has 10 misdemeanor convictions and a juvenile robbery conviction from 2007.

606 Trail sex attack suspect chased down by neighbors armed with baseball bat

Good Samaritans armed with an aluminum baseball bat chased down and detained a man accused of attacking and attempting to sexually assault a woman who was jogging on the 606 Trail June 28, prosecutors said.

A 32-year-old woman and her husband had been jogging together, but the husband ran ahead, and the woman continued jogging alone near the west entrance of the trail around 7 a.m., Assistant State's Attorney Karen Crothers said during a June 30 detention hearing.

That's when Ricardo Colon, whom the woman did not know, allegedly came up behind her, wrapped his arm around her neck, and placed her in a chokehold. She tried to pull away, but Colon overpowered her, threw her to the ground, and kept choking her while grabbing the woman's breasts as she struggled beneath him, Crothers said. The woman briefly broke free and tried to get to the opposite side of the trail, but Colon allegedly caught her again, forced her to the ground, climbed on top of her, and pinned her by her neck and collarbone. While holding her down, he again grabbed her breasts and rubbed her genital area over her clothing, according to prosecutors.

The victim screamed for help in both English and Spanish throughout the attack while desperately fighting back. Prosecutors said she eventually pushed Colon off, kicked him, and then chased after him, punching and kicking him as he staggered away from the trail before collapsing partway down the street.

The woman's screams awakened a married couple who live across the street from the trail. The husband ran outside barefoot after his wife alerted him that someone needed help. He told Colon he was calling 911 while the suspect continued walking away.

The man's wife then came outside carrying an aluminum baseball bat and stayed with the victim while her husband took the bat and followed Colon. Another good Samaritan joined him, and together they caught up with Colon and detained him until Chicago police officers arrived, Crothers said. Officers allegedly recovered three condoms and a bottle of lubricant from Colon when he was taken into custody.

The victim was taken by ambulance to a hospital, where she was treated for bruising to her neck, knee, wrist, forearm, and ankle, along with swelling to one hand and a twisted ankle.

After his arrest, Colon initially claimed he and the victim had simply "bumped into" one another. Prosecutors said he later admitted grabbing the woman while she was tying her shoes and pulling her toward him because he wanted to touch her buttocks.

According to Crothers, Colon told officers he gets "the urge" to touch women's buttocks and asked, "Why are women showing it if they are not going to give it?" She said Colon also told officers that "weird things" happen to him and that he sometimes dreams and cannot tell whether the thoughts in his head are real.

Judge Deidre Dyer ordered Colon detained pending trial on charges of aggravated criminal sexual abuse and attempted aggravated criminal sexual assault.

Members of criminal cyber hacking group "Scattered Spider" arrested in Finland, returned to Chicago

An alleged member of the criminal cyber hacking group Scattered Spider has been arrested in Finland and extradited to the United States to face federal criminal conspiracy charges in the Northern District of Illinois.

A superseding criminal complaint unsealed Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Chicago charges Peter Stokes, 19, a dual citizen of the United States and Estonia, with conspiracy, cyber intrusion, and fraud offenses. Stokes was arrested by Finnish authorities in April pursuant to an Interpol Red Notice and extradited to the U.S. last week. He made an initial appearance in federal court June 30 in Chicago and was ordered to remain detained in law enforcement custody.

According to the complaint, Scattered Spider, also known as "Octo Tempest," "UNC3944," and "0ktapus," is a group of criminal cyber actors that has been involved with more than 100 network intrusions, resulting in more than approximately $100 million in ransom payments and millions of dollars in damages to the victims. The group has targeted numerous corporate victims in the United States by gaining access to companies' employee accounts through fraudulent pretenses, encrypting the companies' data or exfiltrating it to remote servers, and then extorting cryptocurrency from the companies to regain control over their data or prevent the dissemination of the data.

The complaint against Stokes describes a cyber intrusion in May 2025 against a luxury jewelry retailer. Stokes and likely other co-conspirators breached the retailer's computer system, exfiltrated data from the company, and made a ransom demand of approximately $8 million in cryptocurrency, the complaint states. The retailer's security personnel successfully evicted the threat actors from the company's computer network and no ransom was paid. The retailer nonetheless suffered a loss of at least $2 million due to business disruption, investigation, and mitiga-

City's disjointed mental health care program floundering

Despite operational struggles, Mayor expanded program citywide

BY BOB ZULEY

Chicago's mental health program appears disjointed and poorly run despite having the Mayor himself as the program's biggest cheerleader and policy advocate. The biggest operational hurdle has been its transition goal to an exclusive civilian-led response.

This largely stems from Mayor Brandon Johnson's deeply personal experience with the city's mental health policy. His older brother, Leon, struggled with untreated trauma and addiction before passing away in Chicago while homeless, despite being a husband, father, and musician.

Johnson has attributed Leon's death as his motivation for reforming how Chicago responds to psychiatric crises.

Reforming Chicago's mental health care system has proved a bigger undertaking than perhaps even Johnson imagined. Chicago's public health infrastructure was drastically reduced when the city closed half of its city-run clinics in 2012 under then-Mayor Rahm Emanuel.

Successive administrations shifted away from direct city-run care by privatizing remaining clinics and relying on Cook County or non-profit delegate agencies, severely altering neighborhood access.

An audit by the city's Office of the Inspector General found a lack of capacity at these centers and an inability to reliably report relevant performance metrics, leading to inconsistent care and limited bilingual support.

Then-Mayor Lori Lightfoot created the Crisis Assistance Response and Engagement [CARE] program in 2021 that paired mental health professionals, EMT's, and police officers to respond to mental health 911 calls.

Mayor Johnson then shifted the CARE program to rely solely on mental health workers and paramedics, which led to CARE's dispatch volume plummeting almost 70% in 2024, and another decline in 2025 in calls for mental health services when the CPD took back its real time portable data terminals – dropping from 773 calls in 2023 to just 239 in 2024.

Without a police presence, mental health teams struggled to respond to 911 calls, frequently lacking necessary telecommunication systems tied into the city's Office of Emergency Management and Communications that allow real-time emergency locations.

To promote the CARE system, Johnson's aides repeatedly pushed Chicago Dept. of Public Health [CDPH] Cmsr. Dr. Olusimbo "Simbo" Ige to hire more CARE mental health workers.

Dr. Ige resisted the requests arguing hiring more staff was futile because the existing mental health teams already on the payroll did not have enough call volume to keep them busy.

Mayor Johnson subsequently requested and received Dr. Ige's resignation in May 2026.

"There's a tremendous disconnect between the promises being made and what the results are on the ground," Jim Poole, senior policy director at the National Alliance on Mental Health Chicago, told the Tribune.

Amid criticism, Johnson announced efforts to restore the Chicago Police Department's data terminals to CARE crisis teams to improve operational efficiency and response times. He also expanded the CARE program's geographical scope citywide to cover all of Chicago's 77 community areas utilizing a $5.2 million federal grant.

"I'm glad that we seem to be righting the ship, but this should have been something that was taken care of years ago," said Ald. Matt Martin [47th].

Dangers of e-scooters have become very real, says ER doctor

City, state, CDOT encouraging dangerous behavior

BY PETER VON BUOL

Electric scooters are not the toys many parents consider them to be and often, they are a contributing factor to very serious injuries, according to Dr. Caroline Chivily, a Pediatrics Resident at Northwestern/Lurie Children's Hospital, 225 E. Chicago Ave.

Regulation of e-scooters was among the micro-mobility devices included in Illinois Senate Bill 3484, legislation recently passed by the Illinois General Assembly and which is still waiting the signature of Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker. That legislation had been supported by Illinois Secretary of State Alexi Giannoulias.

"We have really seen a stark increase in the number of injuries over the past several years. We had been seeing about five children a year and now it is up to 50 children a year, just here at Lurie. We are seeing head trauma related injuries the most, which is very dangerous, especially for children."

She said these are concussions, skull fractures and other very severe traumatic brain injuries. "Unfortunately, many riders aren't wearing helmets or if they do, they are not rated for the speed the e-scooters can reach (up to 45 miles an hour). Bicycle helmets are just not suited for that," said Chivily.

Add in the young age of most scooter users, most inexperienced in managing traffic, and it's easy to see how tragedy lurks, aided by a mobility industry and political leadership that should know better.

Chivily's personal observations as an ER physician are supported by a study published in March by researchers at the Johns Hopkins Children's Center which reported that children under the age of 16 accounted for more than 45% of all e-scooter related injuries. These included head injuries, traumatic brain injuries and broken bones.

Unfamiliarity with helmets has led many to assume a bicycle helmet would be sufficient to help prevent a serious injury.

"For many of these devices, the recommended type of helmet is the same kind you would see for those riding a moped or a motorcycle. These often provide full coverage, including facial," said Chivily.

Yet Chicago and Illinois continues to endorse this dangerous practice, claiming unforgiving concrete barriers built on roadways will provide protection.

"We have really seen a stark increase in the number of injuries over the past several years.

We had been seeing about five children a year and now it is up to 50 children a year, just here at Lurie. We are seeing head trauma related injuries the most, which is very dangerous, especially for children," said Dr. Caroline Chivily.

According to Chivily, all too often children equate e-scooters with the non-motorized scooters they rode as young children on sidewalks and fail to take into account they operate at a much higher speed, on roadways crisscrossed by city-made concrete barriers, lane blockers and traffic obstacles, that are most always adjacent to much larger moving vehicles.

The Chicago's Dept. of Transportation [CDOT], aided by a windfall of state and federal grants, and also fuel tax money which is mostly outside the purview and supervision of any controlling authority, has booby-trapped local streets with concrete landmines just itching to trip youthful two-wheeled riders. Hit one of CDOT's new concrete barriers built in the middle of area roadways and a youthful rider is apt to lose control and become seriously injured, or worse, killed.

"I think kids don't have a great understanding of the devices that they are using. They just kind of equate them to our more traditional scooters or non-motorized bikes. These e-scooters really have a high rate of speed. Teens have limited physical strength to control them. Adults have more development in their core and better reflexes," said Chivily.

Adults can also process really complex traffic environments. Youthful riders often cannot, and City Hall, CDOT and the state seem to ignore these risks as they expand their network of dangerous concrete barriers and lane blockers around town.

"It is incredibly dangerous for children. The most dangerous ages are between 10 and 15/16. These children do not have the ability to operate a car and yet, they are operating a device that can go as fast as a car or a motorcycle. That's an incredibly dangerous combination," said Chivily.

While SB3484 bans those under the age of 16 from legally operating e-scooters, the city of

Privileged adults also a problem

It is not just children who flaunt laws and exercise privilege behind the concrete barriers of Chicago's bike lanes, one reader wrote to this newspaper last week complaining about motorcycle and Vespa-like motorbikes using bike lanes to advance to the front of the line at stop lights.

Twice last week Edgewater resident Susan Darnall said she was flipped off when she honked at motorcyclists using bike lanes to bypass traffic. The motorcycles "passed my car—on the right—using the bike lane to get ahead of me—then resuming their travel forward in the street's car lane. One was a motorcycle. The other was a Vespa."

Both were using the privileged bike lane to zig in and out of traffic, and when she scolded them for breaking the law, the guy on the motorcycle reportedly told her "it's the law, I can use it [the bike lanes]," while a lady on a Ves-

ADULTS see p. 8

Chicago's e-scooter program has technically already had such a ban in place. Many of those under the age of 16 have found ways to flaunt the rules, especially since the city does not enforce them. Often times, more than one rider will use a single e-scooter.

"Parents just don't realize how fast these scooters go. They don't even know the scope of the injuries the riders are susceptible to when they ride. Some children will have gained access to the devices without their parent's knowledge. Others are just unaware of the safety risk e-scooters pose and parents allow their use. It really comes down to the public not exactly understanding how

Street dedication for Juanita "The Duchess" Ellington

An honorary street dedication will take place on the 4500 Block of N. Broadway in Uptown 11 a.m. Saturday, July 25 for Lois Juanita Ellington.

Ellington, widely known by her stage name Juanita "The Duchess" Ellington, was a scat-singer and vocalist who built her career in the Chicago and Southern California club scenes before relocating to the Midwest.

Ellington's name is spoken with reverence in jazz circles, as music had been a lifelong companion. Growing up in Chicago, she found connection in song, her voice intertwining with her cousin Marie's piano melodies. As "The Duchess," Ellington was soon captivating club audiences with her soulful performances on stage, a talent that took her from the Windy City to the vibrant jazz scene of Los Angeles.

She started her music career as a studio demo singer and earned her signature moniker "The Duchess" while captivating audiences with her soulful and coquettish vocal style. She spent years in Southern California working alongside jazz greats like Eddie (Lockjaw) Davis and producing with Otis Blackwell. She was the charismatic vocalist for numerous bands, including Buddy Montgomery and Lawrence "Tricky Trombone" Lofton. Her voice can be heard on several national radio and TV commercials for major companies, including United Airlines.

Piano-side in her assisted living community's recreation room, Ellington told a reporter once that "Music has defined everything in my life. It's my first connection with family, my first sense of value."

pa just flipped her the bird.

Under both state and municipal law, motorcycles and gas-powered scooters (like Vespas) are classified as motor vehicles, and they are strictly prohibited from using Chicago's bike lanes and must travel in regular vehicular traffic lanes.

So as with most things in life, with no enforcement coming from the police, City Hall or CDOT, rogue motorized vehicle operators will continue to abuse their privilege by using bike lanes to get through traffic.

Mayor's new Tenant's Rights Ordinance will target small landlords

BY JOHN HOLDEN

Chicago has had a stringent tenant's rights ordinance on the books for 40 years. It was ushered into law by then-mayor Harold Washington in 1986. Recognizing the critical role of small landlords who offer tens of thousands of rental units throughout Chicago and often operate on thin margins, Washington's law exempted small, owner-occupied buildings of six-units or fewer from most requirements of the law.

But that could change if Mayor Brandon Johnson succeeds in pushing through a new far more stringent and far-reaching Protecting Tenants Ordinance [TRO], which he hastily unveiled at a Daley Plaza rally on June 29. Immediately following the rally, the ordinance was introduced directly to the Chicago City Council Committee on Housing and Real Estate bypassing the normal for process of first introducing ordinances to the full City Council.

Staffers for Johnson said that move was necessary because renters face an emergency. But veteran South Side Ald. Pat Dowell said that response was "a bunch of junk."

Housing Committee Chairman Ald. Byron Sigcho-Lopez [25th] then presided over a three-hour "informational" meeting at which a variety of housing activists from the Chicago Teachers Union and various tenant rights organizations such as ONE Northside spoke on what they called a rental crisis in which corporate landlords are increasingly raising rents excessively and evicting tenants without cause. Representatives for Chicago's real estate associations and several small landlords testified that the ordinance would only serve to further burden landlords and drive up rents across the board.

Most 'ma-and-pa' landlords today will tell you that the main driver of rent increases are the dramatic hikes in property taxes created by bloated government spending, high insurance costs and high interest rates, all three which are not within the control of landlords.

Housing Committee Chairman Ald. Byron Sigcho-Lopez [25th] presided over a three-hour "informational" meeting at which a variety of housing activists from the Chicago Teachers Union and various tenant rights organizations such as ONE Northside spoke on what they called a rental crisis in which corporate landlords are increasingly raising rents excessively and evicting tenants without cause.

Among the new restrictions the law would impose on all landlords big and small are:

- Creating a "just cause for eviction" provision which would restrict landlords from asking tenants to leave for any but a narrow set of reasons such non-payment of rent or violating terms of their leases. For instance, an owner-occupied two-flat who might want to start using their rental unit for a family member would not be able to do so without first paying their tenants to leave;
- Relocation fees landlords would be obligated to pay tenants could range as high as $10,000 or 10 times monthly rent, which ever is greater. This provision would substantially increase the risk of owning rental housing in Chicago;
- Cap security deposits at one month's rent and abolish move-in fees;
- Create a city-controlled rental registry for all rental units—including those in owner-occupied buildings which would add administrative and possibly financial costs; and

• Increase PRO expands tenant rights to organize, withhold rent, terminate leases, and claim retaliation, with broader remedies and penalties. For small owners, this would increase the risk of legal disputes, higher compliance costs, and potential liability for damages.

None of those from the Johnson Administration or among the aldermanic supporters specifically cited examples where small landlords caused inordinate problems for renters. Among the roughly dozen Aldermen attending the meeting, several raised concerns about the ordinance. Ald. Gilbert Villegas [36th] said it could potentially raise rental costs. Ald. David Moore [17th] noted that his brief experience as a small landlord was so onerous he exited the business as quickly as he could. But others, including Ald. Rossana Rodriguez Sanchez [33rd], spoke in favor of it.

Johnson staffers said they are hoping to pass the ordinance in time to go into effect on Jan. 1, 2027, less than two months before the next mayoral election. The next meeting of the Housing Committee is scheduled for July 8.

lies so we can protect children in a multi-faceted way. We cannot rely on the e-scooter companies to change."

Chivily encourages parents to be vigilant about their children's use of e-scooters and added they should develop family safety plans. Parents should read helmet labels before a child uses it to ride on an e-scooter. Many parents continue to be unfamiliar with the difference between the protection provided by a bicycle helmet and a motorcycle helmet.

"Parents need to realize how unsafe these e-scooters are. They must develop a safety plan to help keep their children safe. These plans are unique to each child because there are multiple layers to prevent e-scooter injuries. Just wearing a bike helmet is not the solution. Is it a suitable helmet? It is actually a group effort to keep children safe," said Chivily.

dangerous these devices can be," said Chivily.

While e-scooters have become very popular within a relatively short time period, more than two dozen states and Washington D.C. have already begun to regulate their use by children. Many instituted helmet laws and an age minimum.

"My hope is more people will continue to speak out about the devastating injuries that are occurring to children who use these devices. Perhaps they will rethink the way that people gain access to e-scooters. Additionally, more states have been passing laws to help protect children," says Chivily.

Her hope is that "physicians, and other advocates, speak out and take a more active role. ER physicians and primary care physicians need to have a one-on-one conversation with fami-

Free screening of "Cooked" Saturday in Clarendon Park

Movie looks back at 1995 heat wave mass deaths

Yes, it gets hot in the summertime, and nobody should be surprised by that, but back in the summer of 1995 Chicago experienced a dramatic jump in heat deaths.

On Friday July 10, the People's Response Network will be hosting a free screening of "Cooked" from 5 to 7 p.m. at Clarendon Park, 4501 N. Clarendon Ave.

This documentary explores the devastating impact of the 1995 Chicago heat wave and serves as a reminder why it is important to check in on neighbors during extreme weather events like heat.

The July 1995 heat wave in Chicago was the deadliest weather disaster in the city's history, resulting in 739 excess heat-related deaths over a five-day period.

Temperatures topped 100°F with heat indices peaking as high as 126°F. Most victims were low-income, elderly residents who lived alone, lacked air conditioning, or kept their windows shut out of fear of crime.

The tragedy overwhelmed the city's infrastructure and emergency services. The power grid buckled under the demand, and a lack of overnight cooling meant residents had no relief from the blistering temperatures.

The Cook County Medical Examiner's Office was so overwhelmed by the sheer volume of fatalities that refrigerated trucks had to be brought in to store all the dead bodies.

Chicago has always had hot summers and frequent heat waves, but after 1995 many learned a hard lesson on why you needed to check in on family and friends.

West Humboldt Park in play

Collectively, these six tracts suggest the frontier of gentrification in West Humboldt Park has advanced a mile west, from Western Ave. to Kedzie Ave. West of Kedzie, home values are lower, but the area remains in play.

DePaul University's Institute for Housing Studies reported that sales prices of homes, and 2-flat to 4-flat buildings along the west end of the 606 Trail have increased a whopping 344% since 2012. However, prices in 2012 were at a post-recession low, with many short sales and foreclosures.

Currently, homes sold typically are new construction or gut rehabs. The median value for all homes in the area, not just those recently sold, is typically in the mid-$200,000s, according to census data.

For minority homeowners on the North Side, gentrification may be the one chance they get to build wealth, urban planners say.

Near Obamaville on the South Side, where gentrification is just beginning to take hold, experts say long-term property owners may soon start cashing in. However, a few mission-driven developers also are building affordable housing south of the Univ. of Chicago on Cottage Grove Ave. between 60th and 63rd streets in Woodlawn.

One mixed-use, mixed-income development is designed for gentrified apartment tenants being forced out by rising rents. The complex doesn't look like affordable housing. It resembles an attractive city street. There's a mix of housing, shops, sports and cultural facilities, and a supermarket.

That may be a model for how to implement affordable housing without displacing long-term renters and impeding private investment.

ments, affecting the developing brain, and send children to our emergency departments."

Teen pot use causes immediate physical effects like increased heart rate, bloodshot eyes, and delayed coordination. Long-term or heavy use can also cause Cannabinoid Hyperemesis Syndrome [CHS], respiratory issues, and permanent disruption to the brain's endocannabinoid system, which is crucial for teen development.

CHS is a condition that causes cycles of severe, intractable nausea and vomiting. This often leads to dehydration, severe weight loss, and frequent emergency room visits.

The law is years in the making after legislators debated how to regulate hemp. Proposals ranged from sweeping bans on hemp products to introducing an entirely new framework of regulations.

Reforms Pritzker supported stalled in early 2025 after fighting between Chicago Mayor Brandon Johnson, House Democrats and himself. The governor endorsed a Senate-passed bill, but the House declined to take it up after a big blow up in a private caucus meeting where Pritzker said members of his administration were verbally abused.

Johnson's team opposed the Pritzker-supported bill. Pritzker bashed Chicago's mayor afterward, saying he rarely reaches out to discuss issues with him, though the governor said he doubts Johnson's opposition stalled the measure.

But this spring, there was little fighting over hemp and cannabis reforms and the bill was introduced in the final days of session without drama.

Other reforms

Beginning Nov. 12, non-intoxicating CBD products with less than 0.4 milligrams of THC will be allowed to be sold outside the regulated market.

With more businesses that sell intoxicating products now subject to regulation, the law also allows the state to issue 45 unused infuser licenses to businesses in January to applicants with prior experience under the state's social equity laws and add 100 new licenses in 2028.

"As industries evolve, our laws must also," Pritzker said. "Today, we are strengthening protections for children, we are expanding access for patients, we're advancing social equity even further, and we're making our regulatory system operate more efficiently and better for everyone."

The bill also made several changes to the state's existing cannabis laws.

All dispensaries in the state will be able to register as medical dispensaries, ending previous restrictions that distinguished between those that could sell medical products or only ones for recreational use. The new changes will also allow medical patients to pick up cannabis curbside or through a drive-thru. More conditions will also qualify patients to receive a medical cannabis prescription.

Alderman: River North shooting was a 'gang-on-gang targeted hit'

BY CWB CHICAGO

An overwhelming display of firepower by five gunmen who killed a man on a River North street corner on July 1 was a "gang-on-gang targeted 'hit' and not a random act," according to the local alderman, who said the victim had been targeted in gang shootings before.

Another man who was in the area, identified as a homeless man who frequents the neighborhood by a resident who spoke with this reporter, is recovering after a bullet intended for the decedent struck him in the foot.

At about 3:20 a.m., five men pulled up to the corner of State and Grand in a newer Honda Accord and hopped out, each masked and armed with either a rifle or a pistol, according to an officer who reviewed surveillance video. All five immediately began shooting at their intended target, a 30-year-old multi-time convicted felon who has not only been convicted of gun possession multiple times, but has also been questioned in connection with at least one murder, according to a law enforcement source. Dozens of shots were fired and police struggled to keep shell casings lying on an office building plaza from blowing away in the wind.

Ald. Brendan Reilly [42nd] sent the following email to his constituents on July 1:

At approximately 3:20 a.m. at State and Grand in the River North neighborhood, five hooded and masked gunmen exited a matte gray Honda Accord. Two offenders were armed with long-guns and the others with handguns and opened fire.

They targeted a 30-year-old man, who suffered multiple gunshot wounds and was later pronounced dead at Northwestern Memorial. A second victim, 65-years-old, was struck by a stray bullet in the foot. He is listed in fair condition at Northwestern Memorial. CPD investigators have recovered dozens of rounds of spent shell-casings at the crime scene.

Following the shooting, the gunmen fled westbound in the Honda. The vehicle was displaying stolen license plates, at the time. I have also received an update from CPD that the Honda has recently been recovered on the West side, where it was set on fire.

The targeted (now deceased) individual was a gang member and convicted felon with a history of drug dealing and gun crimes in the area, as well as conflicts with rival gangs. This was not the first time the individual has been the target of a gang-related shooting.

Though this was a gang-on-gang targeted "hit" and not a random act – I have spoken with 18th District Police Cmdr. Bielfeldt to request an increased late-hour police presence in downtown Chicago during the summer months and especially heading into the July 4th weekend.

Cmdr. Bielfeldt has promised Chicago Police will have a very significant presence in the downtown neighborhoods, along the Lakefront and at Navy Pier for the fireworks display and throughout the July 4th long weekend.

Gun violence downtown is totally unacceptable – just as it should be unacceptable in any of Chicago's neighborhoods. The brave women and men who serve in the Chicago Police Department are working hard to protect our communities. Like all downtown residents, I am grateful for their service and hard work. But we need a greater presence overnight.

CPD's resources are spread thin, but it is critically important we ensure the Central Business District – with its tens of thousands of tourists and tens of thousands of residents – has adequate police resources assigned to keep our downtown safe. I will continue to work closely with my colleagues, Ald. Hopkins and Conway, in our efforts to secure a more significant overnight police presence in downtown Chicago this summer.

Among those disappointed by the abrupt demolition are the members of Preservation Chicago, a non-profit dedicated to preserving the city's architectural heritage.

"Preservation Chicago was once again disappointed with the demolition and loss of 107 E. Oak St. This was a wonderful three-story structure of red brick and highly decorative limestone details, constructed as a residence and later beautifully adapted as a retail structure for most of the last century. This building certainly added to the character and special qualities of this famous retail street," said Ward Miller, the organization's Richard H. Driehaus Executive Director.

Due to the age of the building, a lot of information about the now-demolished building remains unknown. According to researchers at Preservation Chicago, the earliest documented construction record dates to March 1875.

A Chicago Tribune permit notice reported G. Eberlein had built a two-story-and-basement brick structure at what was then 418 Oak St. Eberlein is believed to have been the contractor/builder and not the original owner. The building appears again in a notice from 1877 which documents the house had been sold for $6,500.

"With this loss of this building, constructed in the years that followed the Chicago Fire, we lose yet another link to the city's past. We also lost a beautiful structure, set back slightly from many other structures, which take every inch of land and space, abutting the Oak St. sidewalk. So, in its place, we'll see another glitzy facade and perhaps a new building which could be anywhere, and perhaps even better suited for a southern California setting," said Miller.

The building had been one of 11 Oak Street properties that had been included on the city of Chicago's historic resources survey. Among these buildings is 60-68 E. Oak St., once site of the Esquire Theatre.

"We need to be able to protect buildings of a certain age and quality and we once again want to propose protections for our city's historic structures. Let's begin with ordinances that other big cities have in place, to review buildings more than 50 years old and facing demolition," said Miller.

Oak St. is one of the city's shortest shopping streets and that has been a contributing factor to recent demolitions. Retailers often compete for the same locations. Despite the age of remaining properties, many continue to be subject to demolition. Miller said Preservation Chicago believes Oak St.

would benefit from the creation of its own historical district, similar to the one that protects Armitage Ave. in Lincoln Park.

"Let's once again look at protections to preserve the handful of historic buildings which remain on Oak St. and other places in and around the Near North Side. Otherwise, so much of what makes these places special and also brings people to Chicago has the risk of being compromised and perhaps lost in the future. We can do better as a city and let's really try to find a means to protect these buildings looking to the immediate future," Miller said.

two to his back and two to the back of his head. He was pronounced dead at Northwestern Memorial Hospital. The older man was struck in the foot by a stray bullet and was hospitalized in fair condition.

The gunmen fled west on Grand Ave. in the Honda, which investigators later determined was equipped with stolen license plates. The vehicle was recovered on the city's West Side, where the suspects had set it on fire.

At the scene, investigators recovered more than 100 spent shell casings. The barrage of bullets also shattered the lobby windows of the adjacent Royal Sonesta Chicago River North hotel.

According to Reilly, the deceased target was "a gang member and convicted felon with a history of drug dealing and gun crimes in the area, as well as conflicts with rival gangs." He had previously survived another gang-related shooting.

Following the incident, Reilly met with 18th District Police Commander Christopher Bielfeldt to request a heightened overnight police presence downtown through the summer months, with a specific focus on the holiday weekend.

"Gun violence downtown is totally unacceptable – just as it should be unacceptable in any of Chicago's neighborhoods," said Reilly.

"The brave women and men who serve in the Chicago Police Dept. are working hard to protect our communities," he said. "Like all downtown residents, I am grateful for their service and hard work. But we need a greater presence overnight."

Reilly emphasized the strategic importance of protecting the city's commercial center. "CPD's resources are spread thin, but it is critically important we ensure the Central Business District – with its tens of thousands of tourists and tens of thousands of residents – has adequate police resources assigned to keep our downtown safe."

Reilly stated he is working closely with Aldermen Brian Hopkins [2nd] and Bill Conway [34th] to secure a more significant overnight police presence downtown this summer.

While the extra sheriff deputies were deployed to supplement Chicago police over the holiday weekend, a heavy county police presence will remain at the intersection. The intersection sits directly above the Grand Red Line station, a primary focus of the sheriff's Mass Transit Initiative.

The initiative, part of a state-funded $3.1 million pilot task force, launched on March 27. Since then, teams of approximately 50 sheriff's officers have been working rotating 12-hour shifts targeting safety and quality-of-life issues on the CTA Red and Green lines.

According to performance data released on June 22, the daily transit patrols have resulted in 225 arrests, the apprehension of 74 wanted fugitives, and the recovery of 23 weapons.

Area 3 detectives are investigating the July 1 shooting. No suspects are currently in custody.

The report also tracked foot traffic, noting that cultural venues and events drew more than 1.2 million attendees in 2025, generating $1.8 billion in economic impact. Festivals, fairs, and conventions led the charge, with attendee spending alone generating $1.4 billion annually.

Meanwhile, downtown museums proved to be a major international magnet, drawing 48% of their audiences from out-of-state or global locations.

Kenya K. Merritt, Commissioner of the Chicago Dept. of Cultural Affairs and Special Events, emphasized that investing in downtown culture directly influences the city's broader economic health.

"The creative sector supports jobs, drives business activity, attracts visitors, and contributes to what makes Chicago a world-class city," Merritt said.
