Uplift High earns full 100% failure in math

A shocking statistic has emerged out of Uplift Community High School in Uptown. No, it is not their horrible 13.6% proficiency in reading this time, no, no, no... worse than that is its 100% failure rate in math.

That's right, Uplift High has earned a 0.0% proficiency in math, as was first reported in Uptown Update, an Uptown community blog.

Uplift, 900 W. Wilson Ave., may be the most failure-oriented school on Chicago's North Side, the place to send your kids if you don't want them to ever learn how to read or do math. Or even go to school every morning. As you might have guessed, Uplift also boasts a pathetic 78% of its student body that is chronically absent. District wide, CPS suffers from a 40% chronically absentee rate.

Uplift is one of eight high schools operating since 2018 under the Chicago Teachers Union's preferred sustainable community schools model. Only the data show poor proficiency and high absenteeism compared to the overall average of Chicago Public Schools [CPS]. All this failure for a cost to taxpayers of only $38,345 per student.

Because enrollment has dropped by over 70% from its peak, the school lacks the student body populations necessary to host full sports teams, robust extracurricular activities, or varied elective classes.

When CPS opened Uplift in Uptown, it was not designated an official neighborhood boundary school. It relies entirely on kids actively choosing to enroll there rather than receiving a guaranteed stream of local community children.

While emergency equity grants and the "Sustainable Community Schools" union initiative have injected hundreds of thousands of dollars to keep the school open, data shows these interventions have not successfully turned around test scores or absenteeism. They are actually getting worse.

Because enrollment has dropped by over 70% from its peak, the school lacks the student body populations necessary to host full sports teams, robust extracurriculars, or varied elective classes.

A decade ago, during the 2015–2016 academic year, Uplift Community High School had a chronic absence rate (missing 10% or more of school days) of roughly 31%. Its overall student attendance rate averaged 93.7% during that same school year.

Uplift was founded in 2005 under the Chicago Public

Surveillance state growing in Chicago, CTA forms partnership with the spooks

Last week the Chicago Transit Authority [CTA] announced they are in cahoots with the Chicago departments of Transportation and Finance in expanding their Artificial Intelligence [AI] camera network to photograph and ticket private vehicles for traffic violations.

Their pilot effort started last year with six buses and will now grow to 52 buses that will be equipped with camera equipment tied to AI software that has the ability, and legal authority, to issue traffic tickets. They recently expanded their North Side targeted AI ticketing zone from the Loop north to Irving Park Rd.

This is all part of a nationwide trend of government surveillance through cameras installed in communities across the U.S. under the guise of "public safety."

Yet, in true American fashion, resistance is rising against what can only be described as the arrival of a full-fledged surveillance state, as government creates a buffer from committing civil right violations tied to collecting evidence on people without probable cause by using outside private contractors and AI to do the dirty spying work.

Among the firms helping to grow this spy state are Flock Safety, Clearview AI, Motorola Solutions, Verkada, and Zero Eyes. The CTA has contracted with Hayden AI, a mobile perception platform that goes beyond automated traffic enforcement with vehicle-mounted technology

AI-ticketing program expands north to Irving Park

City Hall approves expansion of AI spying program from six to 52 buses

The CTA is expanding the City's targeting of drivers who pull over to the curb to pick up and drop off passengers by equipping 46 additional buses with technology aimed at enforcing and deterring illegal parking in dedicated bus/bike lanes and bus stops.

If you're planning to drop granny off at her doctor's office, that stop may cost you $250. On July 8, the CTA Board approved an expansion of its Automated that analyzes an urban environment in real time.

Flock Safety is the most prominent brand in the AI surveillance space, and perhaps best known for their automated license plate readers [ALPR] that capture high-resolution images of every passing vehicle. They share their real time data with local, county, state and federal police and immigrations officers.

These spying systems now operate in thousands of communities, with over 110,000 cameras mapped nationwide, according to an open-source project mapping license plate readers called DeFlock.

The City of Chicago does not currently use Flock Safety cameras. Instead, the city relies on its own massive, separate network of Bus Lane Enforcement [ABLE] program north to Irving Park Rd. from the present day boundary at North Ave.

Parking in a bus lane creates a $90 ticket, and parking in a privileged bike lane creates a $250 ticket in Chicago. The city enforces these rules using street spy cameras linked to AI mounted on city vehicles and CTA buses.

street and traffic cameras.

According to the Chicago Office of the Inspector General, The Chicago Office of Emergency Management and Communications [OEMC] operates a massive surveillance network of over 50,000 public and private cameras citywide. The network links feeds from police PODs, CTA transit cameras, and private businesses to monitor public safety, traffic, and emergency situations.

The OEMC monitors feeds across the city to manage crowds, respond to severe weather, and aid in law enforcement. Through programs like Operation Virtual Shield, the city ties together both public infrastructure and external private feeds into one central hub

Devon Ave. Doc opens affordable Bridge Family Health Practice

Despite the rain, nearly 100 people turned out on June 24 for the grand opening of Bridge Family Health, the first Direct Primary Care medical practice in the Evanston/Skokie area. The practice was opened up by Dr. Emma Daisy who for much of her career practiced on Devon Ave. in Edgewater.

Dr. Daisy spent 10 years at Tapestry360 (formerly Heartland Health Centers) located at 1300 W. Devon Ave. where she was a Family Physician and Director of Geriatrics. Dr. Panzer was Vice-President of Care Transformation at Tapestry 360 Health for over a decade.

Direct Primary Care provides longer appointments, direct physician access, and more personalized healthcare by using an affordable monthly membership model.

New proposal emerges for fix up of Uptown Theatre

Owner seeks $200M overhaul, city cash

Developer claimed restoration of the long-shuttered landmark won't pencil out without far more TIF cash than Chicago is willing to provide.

Uptown Theatre owner Jerry Mickelson has a new plan to rehab the landmark Uptown Theater and it includes using his neighbor's property taxes.

Mickelson hopes to tap into local Tax Increment Financing funds [TIF] to help finance what is expected to be a $200 million project.

The developers want to make another attempt to repair and reopen the long-shuttered Uptown Theatre, 4816 N. Broadway. Mickelson said that a full renovation would come with a $200 million price tag, and he told Block Club Chicago that the majority of that funding would have to come from the public.

Michelson pointed to the downtown office buildings on LaSalle St. that are feasting on taxpayer cash through TIFs so that they can build 'affordable housing' penciling out at $400 to $600 per square foot in construction costs.

Michelson claims in the Block Club story that he has already been offered about $50 million in TIF funds.

Previously Mickelson struck a $79 million redevelopment public-private deal with the city in 2018, but the deal crashed when his partner, Farpoint Development, 1308 N. Elston Ave., backed out in 2021. Mickelson blamed the failed effort on the pandemic and concurrent government-imposed economic lockdown that shut down public spaces, and a shaky real estate market.

Jerry Mickelson said that a full renovation would come with a $200 million price tag.

According to Block Club, Mickelson's 2024 application for a community development grant greatly exceeded the TIF guidance which states that the funds should be around 30% of the total cost for the project. TIF assistance for six already approved LaSalle St. housing projects averaged 35%.

Mickelson says that 35% isn't enough for the full restoration project to move forward. TIF help for the restoration of the Congress Theater, 2135 N. Milwaukee Ave., was around 31% of the total cost, but that redevelopment also included affordable housing and 13,000 square feet of commercial space.

For comparison, elsewhere on the North Side, JDL Development and Kanye Anderson Real Estate are looking for $202 million in TIF reimbursements for the Foundry Park megadevelopment along the Chicago River in Lincoln Park, which is under seven-percent of the $3 billion project.

The English and Americans divided by a common language

By Thomas J. O'Gorman

A recent visit to the U.S. by King Charles III of Great Britain to honor America's 250th anniversary of independence revealed the time honored tradition of continued linguistic misconception.

He spoke with polished eloquence in the U.S. Senate. Though thanks to the teaching skills of British TV shows like Monty Python, The Queen, Downton Abbey, Sherlock Holmes and Graham Norton, American ears were more ripe for mutual understanding than ever.

But for long periods of our shared history, confusion has reigned. George Bernard Shaw and Winston Churchill often quoted the famous variant "two nations separated by a common language."

Oscar Wilde's quote about America and Britain not speaking the same language was used in the king's senate speech when he said, "We have really everything in common with America nowadays, except, of course, language." A line Wilde used in his 1887 short story, "The Canterville Ghost."

English, we all admit can be a challenging endeavor. Just think of all that effort used up when you try to give directions to a rideshare driver.

While writing a chapter in a book I am trying to finish, I was attempting to refer to the works of a popular modernist painter whose vast collection of art works fill museums across the world. I referred to his works of art as his "eulogy," with comments on his vast career of art. Meaning like the words on his tomb set in stone. But auto correct changed my word "eulogy" to "eulogy." Not what I meant.

Of course both words signify a form of tribute. But eulogy is a spoken tribute. Not what I was looking for. But since the artist has been dead for more than 50 years I believed "eulogy" was more fitting. More timeless.

But then the word "elegy" popped up. Since it is more poetic I decided to use it. Elegy then seemed more obsolete. More archaic. Elegy seemed just what I needed.

I wanted to "praise" the deceased painter for his genius, artistry and humanity. But at this point I was linguistically exhausted after an English word battle. Elegy, eulogy and elegy had taken their linguistic toll on me.

Of course I immediately thought of all those folk who are greatly challenged by the correct use of English. We share a wide slice of the colloquial verbiage of daily words we "almost" share with Brits. Words like "telly" instead of television, or "knickers" instead of underwear, or "trouser" instead of pants, or "boot" instead of trunk, or "pram" instead of buggy, "quid" instead of pound, or "sweets" instead of candy, "mum" instead of "mom," "chips" instead of French fries, "crisps" instead of potato chips, "loo" instead of bathroom, "banger" instead of sausage, "ginger" instead of redhead, "lift" instead of elevator, "courgette" instead of zucchini, "aubergine" instead of eggplant, "cutlery" instead of silverware, "biscuit" instead of cookie, and "petrol" instead of gas.

All these words give any American or Brit the ability to at least be understood by their English speaking friends. Of course, you wouldn't use them at Buckingham Palace. You'd be better off with French there. But that vocabulary will stand the test of pubs, football matches, rock concerts, the theater, restaurants and hotels.

But remember this, there are no substitutes for the syntax of William Shakespeare, or the musical cadence of Jane Austen, Geoffrey Chaucer, George Eliot, Charles Dickens or Virginia Wolfe and Dame Agatha Christie.

They probably might assist, however, with romance, plumbing, crime solving of murder mysteries, although many of England's best writers have more lofty vocabs. But so does America's writers like Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Mark Twain, Toni Morrison, William Faulkner, Herman Melville, Emily Dickinson, Sylvia Plath and Flannery O'Connor.

George Bernard Shaw once said, that the use of a common language merely enabled England and America to understand the "insults" offered by the representatives of one to those of the other.

"A common language certainly makes an alliance easier; though you must not forget that it also makes quarreling easier."

Which would you prefer, 50 years after your death, as a reminder of your influence and contribution to life? An Elegy? A Eulogy or an Elegy? I'd take a poem of serious reflection any time. The Irishman in me treasures The Lament.

YOU WILL OBEY: Have you caught the new Internet glimpse of Springfield, IL, Bishop Thomas Paprocki and his online warning? Paprocki is a Chicago priest originally made Catholic boss in the state capitol when Cardinal George haunted the Gold Coast.

Ostensibly "Poppo," as he was nicknamed back at school, is explaining the rules for Catholic funerals to all the farmers and ploughboys in his rural diocese. He looks and speaks, strangely, like the poster boy for grim funerals. Genuine undertaker material. It's a humorless video, drained of humanity. Just a few minutes laying the law down about following the laws for Catholic burials. That's old news. Nothing new there. Someone must have laughed during a Springfield funeral.

Hence his reminder. In real life, we believe, when people have the loss and heartache of losing a loved one, we struggle to cope and find hope. So Catholic funeral liturgy better be two things, holy and sympathetic.

Then zip the lip. People are already in deep mourning. Is this a moment to insist you can't have a wake in a church?

It's all spoken, of course, in legal lingo, the somber tone of the lawyer he is. It just proves that after a lifetime of practical experience, it seems you really have to be Irish to get a funeral right.

The bishop will be retirement age soon and will need to align the rules for being shipped out to pasture, I suspect.

Many of this newspapers' readers have inquired from this column if we have a Chicago response to such Sangamon County goings on. I told them I'd rather lunch with Cardinal Raymond Burke, the MAGA prelate festooned in cardinalatial haberdashery that includes an 18-foot watered red silk train.

ECHO PARK: Some Lincoln Park neighborhood residents have blasted the Lakeshore Music & Arts Festival, complaining that "bass beats" echoed throughout the neighborhood for eight hours daily while trash was strewn about the park. Can we look forward now to a future prompt ward-wide ban.

WHEN THINGS WORKED: Shortly after taking office, in 1989, Mayor Richard M. Daley adopted Harold Washington's "sanctuary city" stance. Daley signed 13 executive orders, including one that reaffirmed "fair and equal access" to employment, benefits and licenses to all — regardless of nationality or citizenship. Yes, Federal law trumps municipal law so the effort means nothing to those enforcing the nation's immigrations and customs laws, so the net effect is somewhat hollow. But it made us feel more enlightened.

Former Mayor Richard M. Daley and Tom Donovan.

THE CITY THAT WORKED: Tom Donovan, former Daley boss and CEO of the Chicago Board of Trade has died at 88. A powerful patronage boss in the administrations of Mayors Richard J. Daley and Michael Bilandic before running the Chicago Board of Trade for 18 years. He played a critical role in keeping the Daley political machine in power.

10x felon escapes from electronic monitoring — until he’s found in the Governor’s backyard

BY CWB CHICAGO

A man on pretrial release in a felony retail theft case that he picked up while already on pretrial release for another shoplifting charge disappeared from the Cook County chief judge’s electronic monitoring program for 11 days before authorities found him again — in the backyard of Gov. JB Pritzker’s Gold Coast mansion, court records show.

Those records also indicate that, despite Chief Judge Charles Beach’s public pledge that “major violations” of the court’s electronic monitoring program would be brought before a judge within 24 hours, 10-time convicted felon Dwayne Milton began violating the terms of his release almost immediately upon being outfitted with an ankle monitor, and those violations continued for six consecutive nights before the matter was reported to a judge.

Around 10 p.m. July 4, Chicago police officers were dispatched to the governor’s residence in the 1400 block of N. Astor St. to assist Illinois State Police troopers assigned to Pritzker’s security detail. State troopers had detained Milton, 46, after he allegedly jumped into the governor’s backyard.

A state trooper told CPD officers that they had been monitoring the mansion’s security cameras when they saw Milton attempting to scale over the governor’s rear gate before successfully entering the property. He is charged with misdemeanor trespassing.

Milton, whose Cook County criminal court history includes more than 60 cases, including felony convictions for burglary in 2024, retail theft in 2023, 2014, and 2011, and two robberies in 2005, allegedly admitted to responding officers that he knew there was a warrant for his arrest.

There was.
CPD records show Milton was arrested three times between April 5 and May 5, all for shoplifting. The most recent arrest resulted in a felony retail theft charge. On June 17, Judge Aleksandra Gillespie placed him on electronic monitoring and ordered him to remain in his residence each night until 8 a.m., according to a court filing.

A violation report filed by a court officer on June 25 states that Milton began violating those conditions almost immediately.

According to the filing, he was in violation throughout the nights of June 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22. Each evening, his electronic monitoring device registered a violation beginning at 7 p.m. and “escalated” at 10 p.m. Court records explain that an escalation occurs when a participant is believed to have been outside an approved residence for more than three hours. None of those violations ever “cleared,” the report said.

On June 23, Milton again went into violation at 7 p.m. The incident escalated at 12:25 a.m. on June 24 and did not register a “clear” signal until 6:39 a.m., according to the filing. Finally, on June 25, a pretrial officer brought the violations to Judge Gillespie, who signed a warrant for Milton’s arrest, court records show.

The warrant remained active until Milton was arrested in Pritzker’s back yard around 10 p.m. on Independence Day.

After Beach became the county’s chief judge in December, he immediately appointed a panel to review the court’s electronic monitoring programs and directed it to return recommendations within 60 days. The decision was an effort to tamp down a political storm that hit the courts after a man who was supposed to be on electronic monitoring allegedly set a woman on fire while riding a Blue Line train in the Loop.

Days before Beach’s deadline arrived, he announced several policy changes, including redefining a “major violation” of electronic monitoring from an absence of 48 hours to an absence of three hours and requiring those violations to be presented to a judge within 24 hours.

Three months later, however, we found those policies were not being followed consistently. Court records showed that Alphonso Talley, a repeat violent offender accused of murdering Chicago Police Officer John Bartholomew and critically wounding his partner while AWOL from electronic monitoring, was missing for days before his violations were reported to a judge.

Following those revelations, Beach ordered another internal review of his office’s handling of Talley’s alleged monitoring violations. The results of that review, if any, have never been made public.

Last week, Beach’s office declined to comment on the apparent delay in reporting Milton’s alleged violations to a judge, delays that apparently allowed him to remain at large until he entered the governor’s backyard.

“Pursuant to Rule 2.10 of the Illinois Code of Judicial Conduct, the Cook County Circuit Court is unable to comment on matters that are pending or impending before the court,” Beach’s office said in a written statement. “As the case you reference involves an active matter before the court, we are unable to provide comment on the specific allegations, monitoring records, or judicial decisions associated with it.”

The basis of the refusal to comment is dubious. Beach personally gave an on-camera interview to WGN-TV discussing the Talley case, including Judge John Lyke’s decision to place Talley on electronic monitoring.

In May, citing an effort to be more transparent about the effectiveness of the court’s monitoring programs, Beach revealed that eight percent of defendants who were supposed to be wearing ankle monitors had gone AWOL, including more than 33%

- POD Cameras: The Chicago Police Dept. uses hundreds of highly visible Police Observation Device [POD] cameras to track street crime.
- CTA Transit System: Live camera feeds from every Chicago rail station, as well as cameras on the inside and outside of buses and rail cars, are monitored 24/7 by the CTA and OEMC.
- Private Sector Initiative: Homeowners and businesses now link their own outdoor cameras to the OEMC. This allows emergency officials to access these views only during official emergencies

The initiative links Chicago-based organizations, companies and sister agencies’ camera systems into the OEMC state-of-the-art unified video surveillance network that is then shared widely with other law enforcement.

They provide officials and agencies access such as Homeland Security, Immigrations and Customs officers, the Chicago departments of Police, Fire, Aviation, Streets and Sanitation and Transportation, the Chicago Public Schools, Chicago Housing Authority, Chicago Transit Authority, and the Chicago Park District.

In Aug. 2025, the Secretary of States’ office discovered that U.S. Customs and Border Protection gained access to Illinois license plate camera data – a violation of state law, though under the federal Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution, the designation under state law is meaningless virtue signaling.

There is little doubt the practice continues today through Flock Safety, which operates the largest automated license plate reader ALPR system in the nation, and who contracts with U.S. Customs and Border Protection to access Illinois license plate cameras on Illinois roads and surveil drivers.

Thanks to recent technology upgrades, these urban spy cameras do more than just read license plates and record your vehicle’s unique details; they also track the electronic signatures of Bluetooth, Wi-Fi, RFID, and other wireless signals from devices inside or near your vehicle. That means those on foot, riding the CTA, a bike or scooter can also be tracked. The government claims that there is no presumption of privacy with digital signals that travel over the open airwaves.

But wait, there’s more. Many large retailers and shopping centers in Chicago use private Flock Safety cameras to monitor parking lots and entrances. You will often see them on the North Side at many grocery and big box retail store locations.

Highly probable locations

According to an online Reddit Community that has identified mapping effort platforms, highly probable locations include:

- The Jewel-Osco locations throughout the North Side (such as those in Andersonville on N. Clark St., Edgewater on N. Broadway, and Lincoln Park) which widely use private Flock cameras at their parking lot entrance and exit bottlenecks.
- The high-traffic Home Depot on N. Elston Ave. utilizes these plate readers to monitor property entry points.

- All Target and Walmart retail centers in neighborhoods like Uptown and Lakeview feature these black, solar-powered cameras attached to parking lot light poles.
- Private condo association garages in high-rise residential buildings along Lake Shore Dr. and throughout Edgewater increasingly contract private security companies to install Flock or similar ALPR systems at garage entry gates.

Using AI and optical character recognition, these systems extract as much private data as possible, including timestamps and geo-location, before uploading it to a cloud platform accessible to all participating law enforcement agencies. And yes, they are doing this to law-abiding U.S. citizens without warrants.

Flock markets this as solving crimes, but the system inherently sweeps up everyone. Drive past a camera on your work commute or while doing errands, and your route becomes part of a searchable database.

The reality is that it doesn’t just track your car or devices, the newer cameras use pan-tilt-zoom capabilities and AI to detect and follow pedestrians in real time as they walk through the frame. So your daily trips to work, school, and social events can be reconstructed without ever needing a warrant for traditional GPS or cell tracking.

The private firms claim they don’t decrypt message contents, but they don’t really need that because the metadata alone paints an intimate portrait of your daily life, based on data that you never gave them permission to track in the first place.

In some instances officials discovered that the cameras remained active after cancellation of contracts, and that additional cameras were actually installed. And an audit in Evanston, IL, revealed that Flock had given the city’s data to federal authorities.

Lack of Probable Cause

The Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution protects against unreasonable search and seizure and requires warrants based on probable cause. But that only applies to government.

The U.S. Supreme Court has set important limits on location tracking. In United States v. Jones, the Court ruled that placing a GPS tracker on a vehicle is a search under the Fourth Amendment because long-term monitoring invades privacy.

In Carpenter v. United States, the Court held that accessing historical cell-site location data for extended periods requires a warrant.

The first 10 Amendments of the U.S. Constitution make up the Bill of Rights, including the 4th Amendment which is to protect individual liberty from unchecked government authority. According to the ACLU, governments can skirt the 4th Amendment by exploiting outdated legal doctrines to deploy networks of public cameras and AI, effectively conducting mass surveillance without a warrant. Because traditional constitutional law requires physical intrusion or a targeted breach of privacy to trigger 4th Amendment protections, automated systems now operate in a regulatory gray area.

The surveillance systems today in use in Chicago are more reminiscent of authoritarian regimes like East Germany, North Korea and Red China, which treat their citizens as subjects that cannot be trusted without constant monitoring. And this spying is being foisted on citizens under the ruse and rubric of “safetyism.” Citizens should be rightly wary when they hear a public official suggest they’re expanding surveillance “in an overabundance of caution for public safety,” as government bodies frequently bypass Constitutional protections by claiming surveillance spying is necessary for public safety. This tactic exploits legal loopholes, allowing authorities to track citizens without a judge’s permission.

City's 'bogus' bike report claims concrete barriers don't impede local businesses

The Home Front by Don DeBat

Chicago was once known as the 'city that works.' It was a transportation-oriented hub, but now is run by clout-happy Democratic-Socialist politicians who appear to be kissing the bicycle lobby's sprocket.

City Hall has erected concrete barriers, obstacles and roadway-lane-blockers on key arterial streets all over the city's transportation grid in favor of privileged bike paths. The bike-crazy trend really started during the rule of former Mayor Rahm Emanuel, when Divvy Bikes were introduced.

In Aug. 2025, a record 995,000 Divvy Bike rides were booked. That high mark came after Mayor Johnson cut a deal with Lyft, the system's operator, to reduce fees and add more Divvy stations.

Today, the taxpayer-funded bike lobby is wrapping a chain around Chicago's neck and strangling business owners' ability to conduct commerce. The suicidal elimination of commercial street parking is literally killing businesses.

Metered street parking that turns over quickly is a critical infrastructure need for most every neighborhood commercial district and the city is eliminating it at an alarming rate.

At a taxpayer cost in 2025 of an estimated $17 million, Mayor Johnson, an avid biker, bragged about constructing 100 miles of new city bike lanes, many on the North and Northwest sides, funded by the Chicago Dept. of Transportation [CDOT]. Changes include: raised concrete curbs that eliminate street parking, with metal or plastic barriers and bump outs, concrete obstacle islands that eliminate traffic lanes and narrow roadways, neon-green painted cycling paths, bus-loading "islands," and raised pedestrian crosswalks.

Last year, the city installed more than 12 miles of privileged bike lanes, expanding the reach to nearly 70 miles citywide and covering over 15% of the city's on-street cycling network.

A big part of the problem is that CDOT has no adult supervision. There is very little oversight or outside scrutiny on their spending. Federal and state grants and fuel taxes make up the vast majority of CDOT's budget. Grants account for approximately 70% to 75% of the funding, while fuel taxes add another 5% to 6%. Local funds make up only 13% of its proposed 2026 appropriations.

And CDOT gets a lot of taxpayer cash. The 2025 budget was over $2 billion. For most of the previous decade CDOT was the third-highest funded city department, following the Chicago Police and Aviation departments.

According to the Johnson administration, Chicago now has a 500-mile "Bike-way." That includes bike lanes, off-street trails and "neighborhood greenway" streets that are designed to slow cars and prioritize bicycles. Privileged bike lane critics and irate motorists say the expansion plan is an example of bad city planning run wild.

"Rampant bike-lane construction is causing massive traffic congestion on diagonal arterial streets such as Milwaukee Ave., Clark St., Lincoln Ave., Clybourn and Grand Ave.," complained Mr. Zak, a Lincoln Park resident. Mr. Zak is also an irate Archer Ave. businessman, who recently was impacted by a new Southwest Side bike lane.

"Local businesses along Archer Ave. have lost hundreds of free and metered customer parking spaces, hurting Chicago's economy and draining millions of dollars from the sales tax base," he said.

Mr. Zak told this reporter the weekly net sales at his custom jeans and clothing store in Brighton Park recently plummeted to $100 a week from former annual sales of $600,000-plus a few years ago.

Bike lanes don't hurt businesses?

Last month, CDOT published a "report" on the economic impact of bike lanes on six commercial corridors with bike-lane projects. The report surveyed the change in sales tax revenue, commercial property vacancy and employment, as well as safety and bike usage data.

According to the survey results and data gathered in the report, "the bike-lane projects have not hurt business activity after their installation," although the study does not assert that the lanes themselves improved an area's economic outlook.

The jury is still out on whether or not bike lanes promote safety. The number of crashes involving bicyclists remained the same prior to, and after, bike-lane installations, while scooter accidents and injuries have spiked dramatically.

While many bike accidents are not reported, there were nine crashes in 2018 and 2019, and nine crashes in 2021 and 2022, the study said. The surveyed corridors include bike lanes in two key North Side neighborhoods:

- Lincoln Park. The bike lane on Clybourn Ave. between Division and Halsted streets was constructed in 2015. To make room for the new privileged and painted lanes, on-street parking was moved to one side of the street.

Sales tax revenue along Clybourn declined 28% after the bike lane was installed. However, city researchers said it was unlikely the bike lane caused the drop in tax revenue, noting that many of Clybourn's largest retailers have dedicated parking lots.

- Logan Square. Privileged bike lanes were installed in 2020, along Milwaukee and Armitage avenues between Western and California avenues. Plastic posts eliminated 100 parking spaces on Milwaukee and moved them to side streets and nearby arterial streets, CDOT said.

The Milwaukee Ave. bike-lane report was released as the business strip is wrestling with a high level of vacancies, according to a report by Block Club Chicago. Loading zones and parking alongside the bike lanes were eliminated. Couriers were forced to double park or drive into the bike lane.

The former Gillman Ace Hardware at 2118 N. Milwaukee closed three years after the bike lanes were installed. The owner blamed the loss of parking as a primary factor behind his declining business.

Other North Side neighborhoods in the bike-lane survey were Andersonville, along Clark St. between Lawrence and Edgewater avenues, and Humboldt Park, along North Ave. between California and Central Park avenues.

Is city bike report 'bogus'?

Critics question the credibility of CDOT, and say much of the positive vibe in the city biking report is "bogus propaganda" and carries about as much weight as a flat bike tire.

One vocal opponent of the on-going Archer Ave. bike-lane project is Southwest Side Ald. Raymond Lopez [15th]. The new Archer Ave. bike lanes were not part of the city study.

Lopez said the notion that bike lanes do not harm economic activity was a "lie," citing what he has heard from businesses on Archer in Brighton Park, and elsewhere. Construction on the project remains ongoing, as does a Dept. of Water Management project that has resulted in unrelated, temporary street closures.

"There are 77 communities in Chicago, and 100-plus different neighborhoods—all unique," Lopez said. "You can't expect what works in Uptown to work in Englewood or Little Village."

Slats Grobnik's bike report

To gain clarity about nearly eight decades of historical knowledge on the world of bicycling in the Windy City, The Home Front column recently hosted a séance with Slats Grobnik, the alter-ego of the late Mike Royko, famed Pulitzer-Prize winning Chicago newspaper columnist. Royko's Slats was a comically stereotyped working-class Polish-American Chicagoan. If you are too young and unaware about "Mike and Slats," search Royko's Wikipedia file.

One vocal opponent of the on-going Archer Ave. bike-lane project is Southwest Side Ald. Raymond Lopez [15th]. The new Archer Ave. bike lanes were not part of the city study. Lopez said the notion that bike lanes do not harm economic activity was a "lie," citing what he has heard from businesses on Archer in Brighton Park, and elsewhere.

"Chicago is not as bike-crazy as Amsterdam in Holland. The city's erroneous bike-lane report obviously is hokum brought on by the legalization of marijuana," noted Grobnik, while rolling his eyes and puffing on a Pall Mall.

If Grobnik were running for Mayor of Chicago in 2027, here is an outline of his commonsense bicycle-transportation plan for the Windy City:

- Eliminate bike lanes. Remove all bike lanes on busy arterial streets in Chicago. As a motorist who always drove run-down beaters as a teenager, Slats avoided ex-

Foreigner gets six years for conducting “Tech Support” fraud scheme

A foreign national has been sentenced to more than six years in federal prison for conducting a “tech support” fraud scheme that victimized senior citizens in the United States.

While residing in his native India in 2020 and 2021, Kartik Saini and co-schemers falsely represented to individuals in the United States that they were tech support or security employees of large companies, such as Google, Apple, or Citibank.

Saini or a co-schemer falsely informed the victims that their computers had been hacked and that their bank accounts had been compromised. They then convinced the victims to transfer significant funds to various bank accounts, claiming the companies would safely hold the money while the purported cyber hack was investigated by law enforcement.

In reality, those bank accounts were controlled by Saini and his co-schemers, who used the accounts to steal the victims’ money.

In addition to the tech support fraud, Saini also convinced some of his victims to transfer cryptocurrency or gift cards to him or his co-schemers. In all, Saini defrauded at least four victims with an intended loss of more than $1.2 million.

One of the victims, a Chicago resident, suffered a loss of more than $746,000, which reflected a large portion of her retirement savings.

Saini, 33, was arrested at John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York on Aug. 26, 2024, where he arrived from India. He pleaded guilty in federal court in Chicago in March to a wire fraud charge. On June 25, U.S. District Judge John Robert Blakey sentenced Saini to six years and a month in federal prison and ordered him to pay full restitution to his victims.

Street drugs found in apartment where two women were discovered dead

Two women found dead inside a Bucktown apartment July 10 may have died after ingesting street drugs contaminated with fentanyl or another highly potent substance, although their official causes of death remain undetermined pending additional testing.

Autopsies performed Saturday on Shirley Colon, 36, and Taina Rios, 40, were inconclusive, according to the Cook County Medical Examiner’s Office, which is awaiting toxicology and other laboratory results before determining how the women died.

Chicago police officers responded to a third-floor apartment in the 2300 block of N. Leavitt St. around 3 p.m. Friday, where they found both women dead, according to a police report. First responders discovered suspected narcotics on a counter near the women, along with two straws that appeared to have been used to ingest the drugs, the report said.

A law enforcement source familiar with the investigation said detectives believe the women may have consumed street drugs laced with fentanyl or another powerful synthetic opioid. Investigators are awaiting toxicology results to confirm whether contaminated drugs played a role in the deaths.

Fentanyl, a synthetic opioid that is up to 50 times more potent than heroin, has become a leading driver of overdose deaths in the U.S. While it was once most commonly found mixed into heroin, it is now frequently detected in cocaine, counterfeit prescription pills, methamphetamine, and other illicit drugs, often without users’ knowledge.

In recent years, authorities have also encountered even more potent synthetic opioids, including nitazenes, which can be several times stronger than fentanyl. Public health officials warn that these substances are increasingly appearing in the illicit drug supply, significantly increasing the risk of fatal overdoses.

Cop fires shot at ‘sideshow’ driver who nearly ran him over in Grant Park

A Chicago police officer fired a shot at a vehicle that drove toward him during a stunt driving “sideshow” in Grant Park July 12, according to a law enforcement source. The driver sped away from the scene, but police took four people into custody after stopping a similar-looking vehicle that appeared to have a bullet hole in the hood near Sox Park about 15 minutes later, the source said.

At 3:01 a.m., officers in the Central 1st District, which patrols the Loop, were notified that officers in another part of the city had spotted a black Chrysler 300 with four occupants, two of whom were seen carrying large firearms, participating in a street takeover, according to police radio transmissions. The takeover had moved to the 700 block of S. Columbus Dr., and units from the downtown area were sent to break it up.

An officer monitoring downtown surveillance cameras spotted the takeover and reported that participants had also opened a fire hydrant. Arriving officers reported that participants shot fireworks at them and said they saw the Chrysler 300 doing donuts in the intersection of Columbus and Balbo, according to radio transmissions.

Police placed multiple “stop sticks” under vehicle tires to keep drivers from fleeing while officers issued citations.

Shortly after arriving, an officer reported firing at least one shot toward a black Chrysler 300 with tinted windows that he said tried to strike him at the scene. No injuries were immediately reported, but an ambulance was brought to the scene in Grant Park to check on the officer.

At about 3:17 a.m., officers stopped a Chrysler 300 near Sox Park with tinted windows and decals similar to those reported at the street takeover. An officer who stopped the vehicle said it appeared to have a bullet defect in the hood. Four people were detained.

Back in Grant Park, officers reported that several vehicles had been abandoned in the area and along Lake Shore Dr. with flat tires, apparently after sideshow drivers rode over CPD stop sticks.

The Civilian Office of Police Accountability said it was sending a team to the Grant Park scene to investigate the officer’s use of force. Under CPD policy, any officer involved in a shooting is assigned to administrative duties for at least 30 days.

34-time convicted felon gets 25 years for firing a shot during River North robbery; accomplice got 10 years

A man convicted on 30 felony counts stemming from a violent robbery in 1997, including attempted murder and home invasion, was sentenced to 25 years in prison July 9 for a 2023 armed robbery inside a River North parking garage, where prosecutors said he fired a gun at a victim who was running away.

Cook County Judge Kenneth Wadas handed down the sentence for 55-year-old Mitchell Davis nearly a year after finding him guilty following a bench trial in which Davis represented himself.

The case goes back to a robbery just after midnight on April 21, 2023, inside the parking garage at 540 N. State St. Prosecutors said two men were waiting for an elevator when Davis, 34-year-old Duran Gladney, and a third, unidentified accomplice came out of a nearby stairwell armed with handguns. Davis pointed a gun at one of the victims, a resident of the building, and went through his pockets, taking three cell phones, more than $1,000 in cash, and three key fobs, prosecutors said.

At the same time, prosecutors said, Gladney pointed a handgun fitted with a green laser sight at the second victim, causing him to drop his groceries. The third offender struggled to load a drum magazine into his weapon, and while he was distracted, the first victim shoved Davis and ran, according to prosecutors.

He had made it only about seven feet when Davis fired a shot at him. The bullet missed. Davis and Gladney chased the man through the garage, but he managed to reach a parking attendant and got help. The second victim ran to an upper level of the garage and called 911.

Chicago police officers blocked the garage’s access points moments before Gladney arrived at an exit in the getaway car with Davis riding in the back seat, prosecutors said. Officers recovered a handgun from beneath each of the seats where the two men had been sitting, according to prosecutors. Investigators also recovered the first victim’s key fobs from the vehicle, and the third offender’s drum magazine was found on the garage floor with live ammunition scattered nearby.

Prosecutors described Davis as having an extensive violent criminal history. In 1997, he was convicted on 30 felony counts, including attempted murder, home invasion, and armed robbery, after forcing victims to lie on the floor while he demanded money and shooting one victim during a struggle. Prosecutors said Davis committed another home invasion just 10 months after he was paroled.

Under Illinois law, Davis is expected to receive day-for-day sentencing credit, meaning he will serve half of his 25-year sentence if he behaves in prison. With credit for time already served in the Cook County jail, he has a little more than nine years left to serve.

Gladney pleaded guilty to armed robbery in December 2023 and was sentenced by Wadas to 10 years in prison, which will also be reduced for good behavior. Prosecutors said he has six prior felony convictions, including two weapons convictions, robbery, and manufacture or delivery of heroin. Illinois Dept. of Corrections records list his projected parole date as Feb. 1, 2027.

Edgewater man acquitted of murder, but judge says he hid victim’s body in fridge

Malik Lee

An Edgewater man has been found not guilty of killing a man prosecutors alleged he had been in an on-again, off-again relationship with, but a judge did find him guilty of hiding the victim’s body inside his apartment refrigerator.

Judge Adrienne Davis sentenced Malik Lee, 48, to five years in prison for concealing a homicidal death. However, with Illinois’ standard 50% sentence reduction and credit for the time he spent in jail awaiting trial, Lee will not serve any additional prison time.

Marcus Merge was battling a life-threatening illness and struggling with drug addiction when someone killed him in his Edgewater apartment and stuffed his body into the refrigerator during the summer of 2020. After a two-year investigation, prosecutors charged Lee in July 2022, alleging he had been in an on-again, off-again relationship with Merge. Prosecutors contended Lee strangled the 58-year-old with an extension cord during an argument.

Merge’s friends remembered him fondly in a Chicago Tribune story published shortly after his death, remembering him as a passionate Alcoholics Anonymous program sponsor.

“Before his mother’s recent death, Merge would ride trains and buses to visit her in Lake Forest. An interior designer by profession, he would decorate the windows of her senior housing according to the seasons,” the Trip reported.

“He always made everybody feel very comfortable,” a friend told the paper. “Marcus to me is nothing but kindness and welcoming, and I don’t know why anybody would want to do that to him.”

According to prosecutors, Lee and Merge met about a year before the killing. They frequently got together to eat, use drugs, and occasionally have sex. Merge also sometimes gave Lee and members of his family money, prosecutors said. But over time, their relationship deteriorated. Prosecutors said Merge kept a “detailed calendar” documenting the relationship, a point they highlighted during Lee’s detention hearing on the Fourth of July in 2022.

Suffering from a debilitating disease, Merge’s weight had dropped to just 121 pounds by June 28, 2020. Around 4 p.m. that day, surveillance cameras in his apartment building in the 5700 block of N. Sheridan recorded Merge returning home with Lee. Prosecutors said the two argued as they boarded the elevator and rode to the fifth floor. Merge was reportedly never seen leaving his apartment again.

Prosecutors alleged the argument continued inside the apartment. They said Merge struck Lee, leaving a cut near his eye. Lee then strangled Merge with his hands before choking him from behind after he fell to the floor, prosecutors claimed. They alleged Lee next used an extension cord to continue strangling Merge, but Merge managed to crawl into the bedroom. According to prosecutors’ theory, Lee followed him, grabbed a pillow, and smothered Merge before dragging his body into the bathroom.

When Lee realized Merge was dead, prosecutors argued, he bought six bags of ice and used them to keep the body cold in the bathtub. Later, they alleged, he removed the shelves from Merge’s refrigerator and stuffed the body inside.

A building manager discovered Merge’s body in the refrigerator during a well-being check on July 6, 2020. The Cook County medical examiner ruled the death a homicide caused by strangulation.

Investigators found fingerprints on the refrigerator shelves, which had been hidden in a closet. Some belonged to a woman who worked at the appliance manufacturer’s factory in South Carolina. Prosecutors said the remaining prints matched Lee.

Ultimately, however, Davis ruled the evidence did not prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Lee committed the murder. She instead found him guilty only of concealing a homicidal death.

Lee still faces charges in another felony case.

On June 5, 2020, just 23 days before Merge was last seen alive, prosecutors charged Lee with attempted vehicular hijacking. In that case, prosecutors alleged he brandished a knife and ordered two people out of a car in the 1100 block of W. Bryn Mawr Ave. The driver instead backed away and sought help. That case remains pending.

Chicago hate crime reports plunge even after city made reporting easier

BY CWBCHICAGO

Chicago's efforts to encourage more people to report hate crimes appear to be producing an unexpected result.

Despite creating new ways for residents to report bias incidents and expanding efforts to identify potential hate crimes, the number of hate crimes reported to the Chicago Police Dept. [CPD] has dropped sharply.

CPD records show hate crime reports are down 30% compared with the first half of last year and 54% from the same period in 2024, with declines across every major protected class.

That may be a surprising revelation given the extensive news coverage given to recent incidents, including a cross-burning in Grant Park that an Asian college student claims was intended to be a message to "MAGA Christian nationalists" who support President Donald Trump, not Blacks.

Hate crime reports surged dramatically in June 2020 as protests and riots followed the murder of George Floyd by a Minneapolis police officer. Cases continued rising for several years, reaching a record 303 reports in 2023.

That year's surge was driven largely by religion-based hate crimes as the Israel-Hamas war sparked pro-Palestinian demonstrations that some people used as cover to target Jewish residents and institutions.

Against that backdrop, the Chicago City Council unanimously approved the "CHI vs. Hate" ordinance in Dec. 2023. The measure created a system allowing residents to report "hate incidents" through 311 even if the conduct did not meet the legal definition of a hate crime.

Supporters said the ordinance would make it easier for victims to come forward while giving the city a better understanding of bias-related incidents that might otherwise go unreported. Even with those expanded reporting efforts in place, hate crime reports have fallen across every major protected class.

Race-based hate crimes have dropped from 170 cases in 2023 and 123 last year to 33 during the first half of this year, according to CPD. Hate crimes based on sexual orientation have fallen from a high of 64 cases in 2024 to 24 through June 30. Religion-based hate crimes have also declined, falling from 89 reports last year to 16 during the first six months of this year.

Hate crimes based on gender identity have also decreased. After averaging about nine cases annually since 2019 and peaking at 11 incidents in 2024, the city recorded three cases during the first half of this year.

Ald. Debra Silverstein [50th], the only Jewish member of the City Council and the lead sponsor of the CHI vs. Hate ordinance, said the citywide decline in hate crime reports is good news.

"I am encouraged that hate crime numbers have declined, and I am deeply grateful to Supt. Larry Snelling and the dedicated Chicago police officers who work every day to keep all our diverse communities safe," Silverstein said July 8. "This reduction underscores the critical role our police play in protecting residents and improving public safety."

Still, Silverstein said the numbers show more work remains.

"We cannot overlook the fact that anti-Jewish hate crimes remain disproportionately high against a community that makes up only 3% of Chicago's population," said Silverstein, whose Far North Side ward includes a significant Jewish population.

She also urged Mayor Brandon Johnson to "treat this issue with the seriousness it deserves."

Ald. Timmy Knudsen [43rd], a member of the City Council's LGBTQ+ caucus, also welcomed the trend, saying he was "encouraged to hear that hate crimes,

Don is right

Don DeBat is right [July 8] that gentrification is not always a dirty word. Neighborhoods change. Buildings are renovated, businesses open, property values rise, and new residents arrive. Much of Chicago's strength comes from that constant renewal.

But there is an important distinction between land use succession and government sponsored transformation. Land use succession occurs gradually as buildings, businesses, owners, renters, and uses change over time. The other can occur overnight when government changes the zoning map and grants a single developer a massive increase in density.

That distinction matters. A neighborhood may naturally become more valuable without requiring government to discard existing zoning, overlook earlier downzonings, or create development rights that did not previously exist. Growth can be healthy without being unlimited, and investment can be welcomed without treating every request for greater density as progress.

The best neighborhoods evolve incrementally. Their buildings, parks, streets, stores, and residents change over time. No single project defines them. But when a major upzoning or planned development suddenly changes the scale of a site by fiat, government is doing more than allowing a neighborhood to evolve. It is creating new value.

But who gets the benefit, and who lives with the consequences?

Gentrification may not be a dirty word. Neither is planning. Chicago's great neighborhoods grew and changed through land use succession. The difference is that they were truly planned developments, not imposed designs that sidestep building and site access requirements.

The city has not announced how it will apply this new AI ticket-writing technology in emergency situations, when car drivers must ‘pull to the right for sirens and lights’ to allow emergency vehicles to pass by.

Buses equipped with the AI-supported ABLE systems will focus on enforcement of the #20 Madison, #36 Broadway and #66 Chicago Ave. routes with plans to expand to the #8 Halsted route at Chicago and Halsted.

The installation of AI cameras on those additional 46 spy buses is expected to be completed this fall and will greatly increase the number of AI-generated tickets drivers will be getting in the mail.

By scaling up the program from six to 52 camera-equipped buses, the CTA in partnership with the predatory City of Chicago will be better able to target drivers who parking in bus- and bike-only lanes and bus stops, to pick up or drop off passengers.

Once City Hall sees the cash start rolling in from AI-generated

Few are using bikes to get around

According to data compiled by the taxpayer-funded non-profit Active Transportation Alliance, very few daily commuters in Chicago use bikes and scooters.

In Chicago, cars are the most popular way to get to work. Public transit is second. Bicycles and scooters make up a minuscule share.

- The daily commute breakdown for Chicago residents is:
- Cars, trucks, or vans combined equal roughly 45% to 58%. This includes driving alone or carpooling.
 - Buses and trains combined contribute about 25% to 27%, and the Chicago Transit Authority provides the bulk of this traffic.
 - Bike and scooter use is a paltry 1% to 2%.

CTA ticket-writing, they will likely seek other uses for the technology to help fill budget gaps and grow spending.

One unexpected consequence of this new policy will no doubt be people changing their driving behavior and stopping vehicles in the middle of active lanes of traffic when picking up or dropping off friends family, or customers.

Many of Chicago’s curb lanes and commercial parking spots on the North Side have already been eliminated by the construction of privileged biking lanes that incorporate concrete barriers and fixed traffic lane obstacles to deny drivers access to the curb.

This is the latest advancement of the City of Chicago’s controversial Smart Streets pilot program and is a key fundraising option in the region’s ongoing focus on eliminating the use of cars and expanding the use of bus service under the new Northern Illinois

Transit Authority [NITA].

The Smart Streets pilot program is an initiative with the Chicago departments of Transportation and of Finance to use camera technology to automatically tickets citizens who are hoping to find curbside parking that is now being turned over at an alarming rate to exclusive bus lanes and privileged bike paths.

Quickly turned-over commercial curbside parking at metered spots is a critical infrastructure need for most all neighborhood shopping districts, and it is broadly being eliminated now by bureaucrats in City Hall.

Building active privileged bike lanes curbside also creates new hazards for the blind and disabled to get to bus stops, in that it can force them to cross over raised concrete barriers and pass through lanes activated with lawless bike and scooter users.

The program expansion is being supported with $1 Million provided by taxpayers through the NITA Act that the Regional Transportation Authority approved in the amended 2026 operating budget. The program encourages bus lane and bus stop ticket-writing enforcement infra-

Between Oct. 15, 2025 and the end of May, ABLE systems on buses captured a total of 21,686 warnings and violations in that area. At $90 per ticket that represents nearly $2 million in new ticketing revenue; at $250 that represents over $5.4 million. With the expansion to 56 buses Chicagoans can expect to see a ten-fold increase in the number of tickets being generated by AI technology.

structure to penalize those drivers who only seek to pull over to the curb, a normal transportation move that drivers have utilized in Chicago for over 100 years.

The city’s pilot zone area now encompasses 19 square miles, 1300 bus stops, nearly eight miles of bus lanes and nearly 70 miles of bike lanes. Between Oct. 15, 2025 and the end of May, ABLE systems on buses captured a total of 21,686 warnings and violations in that area. At $90 per ticket that represents nearly $2 million in new ticketing revenue; at $250 that represents over $5.4 million. With the expansion to 56 buses Chicagoans can expect to see a ten-fold increase in the number of tickets being generated by AI technology.

The two-year pilot program, initiated by Chicago City Council ordinance, authorized the City to issue citations by mail for bus and bike lane and bus stop parking violations captured by city cameras in a designated pilot area downtown. At the beginning of 2026, City Council expanded the pilot area to its current boundaries, extending from Irving Park Rd. on the north to 26th St. on the south.

Each system includes an on-board processor, along with two windshield-mounted cameras that allow the ticket-writing system to spy of vehicle drivers and record data capturing violations in bus lanes, bike lanes and bus stops.

An outside technology vendor is responsible for performing a manual review of violations data before transferring it to the City of Chicago for final determination and violation issuance, so Chicago citizens will likely have no idea who is actually making ticket-writing determinations. The CTA is not involved in reviewing potential violations or issuing tickets.

Bug Squad opens at Nature Museum

In the imaginative world of “Bug Squad,” insects don’t just have super abilities, they are real superheroes.

The exhibit on bugs and pollinators will open next week for young visitors at the Chicago Academy of Sciences, 2430 N. Canon Dr.

Youth can join the swarm, learn about each Bug Squad member, and try out their super abilities in this interactive play space July 25, through Nov. 29.

Bug Squad attempts to create a learning opportunity by introducing children in a world inspired by fictitious superheroes and factual science. Families can meet the squad through talking animatronics, explore their abilities through interactive experiences and play-based STEM activities, and learn about real-life bug abilities and traits. Families will play and explore and may gain a greater love for science and an appreciation for biodiversity.

The exhibit is an effort to educate and engage kids with environmental science. They hope to inspire kids to explore bugs, nature, pollinators, and science through hands-on activities, live demonstrations, and creative learning adventures.

REPORT from p. 5

pressways and only used arterial streets because it was easier to change a flat tire. Plus under the current set-up, the concrete barriers make it impossible for drivers to "pull to the right for sirens and lights." Emergency vehicles are also trapped in CDOT-created traffic jams, as there is no path to the curb on streets barricaded behind concrete like East Berlin was during the Cold War.

• Remove landscaped parkways. Popular during the Mayor Richard M. Daley era, Slats believes landscaped parkways on wide, four-lane arterial streets such as Irving Park Rd., Clark St. and Peterson Ave. cause accidents and cost millions of tax dollars to maintain. The widest lane on Clark St. in North Edgewater today is not for transportation, but is reserved for grass and trees.

With parkways removed, an extra lane of traffic would be added. The speed limit leading to the Kennedy Expy. and Lake Shore Dr. could be increased to 45 miles per hour.

• Expand parking. Slats believes the bike-lane expansion has created a huge, dangerous, and costly traffic and parking problem. Therefore, his plan is to restore hundreds of desperately needed street-parking spaces, especially in front and near neighborhood saloons.

• City-owned meters. Any re-envisioned parking-space plan should be metered and owned by Chicago under a new city-controlled program that cuts out Chicago Parking Meters LLC, the financial investors that fleeced the city with a 75-year lease that cost them only $1.15 billion. The parking deal now is worth an estimated $3 billion.

Plus the city is quickly refunding that $1.15 billion through annual "true up" payments to Chicago Parking Meters LLC. Through 2025, Chicago has already paid a total of $246 million in penalties to our parking landlords.

• Softball parking. An avid 16-inch slow-pitch softball player, Slats' master-parking plan also calls for metered diagonal "nose-in" parking on both sides of Columbus Dr. near the famed Grant Park ball diamonds. On weekday game nights, players should be charged $5 or less for two hours of softball parking. And, the valley diamonds at Grant Park should be renamed "Mike Royko Field" in honor of the columnist who promoted "Chicago's Game" better than any politician.

• Recreational biking. In the interest of safety, only allow recreational biking in Chicago along Lincoln Park's paths, expanses of the North Side and South Side lakefront, in public parks across the city, and in Cook County Forest Preserves. However, for personal safety, Slats recommends that recreational biking only be done in Chicago during daylight hours. Bikers should report to the nearest saloon after sunset.

• One-way bike lanes. Always willing to compromise with the politicians, Slats' backup plan is to remove only half of the city's bike lanes, especially on the North Side. According to the taxpayer-funded non-profit Active Transportation Alliance, bikes and scooters make up only a paltry 1-2% of daily commuters. So it's not much to ask devoted bicyclists to wheel north on the east side of Lincoln Ave. And ride south on the west side of Clybourn Ave. Then, peddle north on the east side of Milwaukee Ave. and south on the west side of Elston Ave.

With half the bike lanes removed, hundreds of diagonal "nose-in" revenue producing, city-owned metered parking spaces would be reinstalled on the side of the streets without bike lanes for the roughly 45% to 58% of daily commuters who use cars, trucks and vans.

Increase biking revenue.

Slats believes bikers should pay their way and not get a free ride. All bike owners must register their wheels and pay an annual $100 licensing fee, similar to the $150 automobile owners pay for an annual city sticker in Chicago.

• Increase biking revenue.

Slats believes bikers should pay their way and not get a free ride. All bike owners must register their wheels and pay an annual $100 licensing fee, similar to the $150 automobile owners pay for an annual city sticker in Chicago.

Motorized electric bike owners should pay $125. Slats may not be a Democratic Socialist, but he would allow electric golf carts to use the bike lanes for the same $125 bike-sticker fee. When Royko wasn't playing softball for the Chicago Daily News and the Sun-Times, he was on the golf links.

For additional revenue, Chicago Police Dept. bicycle cops should police the bike lanes and streets to hand out traffic tickets to bicyclists who break the law, especially those who gleefully peddle through traffic lights and stop signs regardless of traffic. Maybe insist bike and scooter riders wear trackable air tags so they can be ticketed by Chicago's spy systems for every rule of the road violation they commit.

• Electric auto fees. Drivers who choose to sit in bumper-to-bumper, rush-hour expressway traffic, should not pay to park. However, to help defray the cost of expressway repaving every five years, Slats' Road Revenue Plan calls for electric car owners—who do not pay our inflated city and Cook County gasoline taxes—to be billed an annual fee based on their vehicle's annual mileage.

With at least six candidates running for the mayor of Chicago, let's hope they are taking bike-lane and city parking notes from Grobniak. Slats says the first one who announces they want to roll back the concrete biking barriers and roadway obstacles will get his vote.

St. Ignatius campus community meeting July 20

There is a community meeting scheduled to discuss the future of the St. Ignatius campus located at 6559 N. Glenwood. The meeting will take place 6:30 p.m. Monday, July 20, in the church's main sanctuary.

The meeting is being hosted by the 49th Ward office, the Ignition Mission Center [IMC] and Loyola Univ.

In 2021, the Archdiocese merged St. Ignatius with nearby St. Gertrude, closing the St. Ignatius campus due to declining church attendance and diminishing financial resources to maintain the building. In 2023, Loyola announced it had purchased the site for redevelopment. Since its closure, a group of parishioners, the IMC, has worked closely with the Archdiocese, Loyola Univ. and local 49th Ward office to find a solution that continues the mission of St. Ignatius of Loyola, who founded the religious order of the Society of Jesus (Jesuits)—known for its missionary work—while preserving the historic cathedral.

The IMC and Loyola will join in to discuss the redevelopment plan and reimagining of the St. Ignatius campus. The proposal includes preserving the cathedral and rectory on 6559-6565 N. Glenwood by creating a social service center on the St. Ignatius campus that would house a women's shelter, a childcare center, a food pantry, and provide space for a lay association for religious gatherings and devotions.

Since its closure, the IMC has run a weekly food pantry out of 1735 W. Greenleaf Ave. The proposal would shift these services to the church basement alongside a social services center that would offer health screenings, counseling, and community events.

The plans for the IMC on Glenwood do not trigger a zoning change, but would require a special use permit to operate out of the space.

Loyola Univ. is proposing to demolish the former Waldorf campus buildings at 1300-1320 W. Loyola to build student apartments. Their proposal includes 65 student apartments reserved for upper-class and graduate students to free up privately owned community housing.

They have also committed to providing $625,000 over 10-years to the IMC to support its programs and services. They have also committed to donating 1,500 square feet of rent-free community space to IMC and its partners.

Loyola explored retrofitting the Waldorf School campus to avoid demolition, but the repairs required to bring the building into compliance with the City's building code made the effort financially infeasible. Loyola's plans would trigger a zoning change from the current RS-3 designation to RM-5.5.

Mr. Don Sadofsky Foundation launches free Summer music camp for students

A celebration of the arts marks a new chapter in preserving Don Sadofsky's legacy through a collaboration between the Foundation and the Chicago Park District. The Mr. Don Sadofsky Foundation for Music Education will launch its first tuition-free Summer Music Camp for students entering grades 6-12 (all skill levels welcome) at Indian Boundary Cultural Center from July 20-31.

That's right, this one time at band camp.

The camp will provide students with music instruction, mentorship, performance opportunities, and a positive summer arts experience at no cost to families. Students will also have the opportunity to perform during the Foundation's Community Celebration of the Arts on Saturday, Aug. 1.

The Foundation was created by Dr. Markeise R. Russell to honor Mr. Don Sadofsky, a longtime Chicago Park District music teacher whose decades of work have helped make music accessible to generations of students, families, and community musicians.

"For me, this is personal," said Russell. "Mr. Sadofsky was one of the educators who changed the course of my life. This Foundation is about honoring that legacy while making sure more young people have access to music, mentorship, and opportunity."

The Community Celebration of the Arts will take place at Indian Boundary Cultural Center on Aug. 1. The free public celebration runs from 2 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., with family activities, food, community partners, and sponsor tables. The program features student performers, the Revolutionary Swing Orchestra, guest artist Thaddeus Tukes, awards and recognitions, and the Sweet Home Chicago Community Jam.

The entire community is encouraged to share the camp opportunity with students who love music and may benefit from a free summer music experience.

Sadofsky Summer Music Camp runs from July 20-31, at Indian Boundary Cultural Center, 2500 W. Lunt Ave. for students entering grades 6-12 (all skill levels welcome) — Tuition-free for families.

Judge Cohen ruled against city retirees too

Good article by Bob Zuley on Edgewater Residents for Responsible Development's court case [July 8]. Judge Neil Cohen ruled against city retirees in class action lawsuits (Underwood vs city of Chicago and Korschak vs city) years ago concerning retiree health care for municipal workers.

The Krislov Law firm was the only firm that would represent the plaintiffs. The promised health care subsidy of 55% was for retirees whose employment began before 1987. Before 1987 the city did not deduct for Medicare or Social Security. Former Mayor Rahm Emanuel eliminated the health care subsidy leaving retirees ineligible for Medicare or Social Security. After about 10 years of the case bouncing back and forth between circuit, appellate and supreme courts it landed back to the circuit court. In the end Cohen ruled against plaintiffs.

Cohen was or is married to a corporation council lawyer and was appointed circuit judge at the time. So he didn't hold the city accountable. Also part of the suit was the four municipal pension funds (police, fire, municipal, and laborers) that were legally bound to give annuitants $25 per month for a health care subsidy which pension funds fought against. The Krislov Law firm had two lawyers: Krisov and Goldman.

Each pension fund had two lawyers and city's Corporation Council costing pension funds millions of dollars over eight years of court hearings to fight a $25 per month subsidy. Cohen ruled the annuitants have to show their Obamacare premium payment stubs to get reimbursed and the pension funds can take as long as they want to repay annuitants.

I attended many court hearings and was thoroughly disgusted with Cohen's prejudice.

Reject this development

I am writing to express my strong opposition to the planned lakefront development on Sheridan Rd. I believe this project represents Trump-style overdevelopment, that prioritizes profit over the safety and well-being of our community. Furthermore, proceeding despite overwhelming local opposition to the loss of the precious little remaining lakefront contradicts the principles of Tikkun Olam and Bal Tashchit, which call on us to leave the world a better place.

My concerns include public safety and emergency access. Sheridan Rd. is already heavily congested. Adding 602 units will make traffic impassable and further delay emergency vehicles, ambulances, fire trucks already often blocked, creating a life-threatening hazard for the neighborhood.

The impact will be significant on vulnerable residents. A large portion of our local population is retired or elderly. This development threatens their safety and quality of life by disrupting essential services and pedestrian safety. I wonder if these zoning changes were proposed for Edgewater, by developers/politicians knowing that the older demographic is likely less able to fight the injustice.

Setting aside only 20% of the units as affordable is an insufficient return for the zoning changes that are profiting Fern Hill. These are excessive public subsidies. It is unfair that substantial tax breaks and zoning changes are being used to subsidize a residential project where 80% of the units are luxury market-rate rentals, $3,000 per month for one bedrooms. Chicago needs truly equitable, mixed-income housing, not projects that primarily cater to high-income earners.

Our existing infrastructure is already overcrowded. This project will increase congestion, lower quality of life without providing necessary improvements to offset the impact. The community has made its rejection of this proposal clear. I urge our leadership to respect the voices of their constituents and reject this development to prevent lasting harm to the Edgewater community.

Schools' Renaissance 2010 initiative. They operate on the principles of social justice, project-based learning, and an "Early College STEAM" model. But we can take the "M" out of the acronym, because they're failing at math.

The concept was to allow students to take college-level courses at neighboring Truman College, earning up to an associate degree while simultaneously completing their high school requirements.

School supporters will rightly say that Uplift's severe struggles stem from a compounding cycle of critical enrollment drops, lack of localized neighborhood assignment, poverty and homelessness, safety concerns, and falling academic metrics. But there is no papering over a 0.0% proficiency rate in math.
